Under S. 111, I.P. Code, and abettor may be liable for a different act than the one he instigated, provided the different act was a probable consequence of the abetment and was committed under the influence of instigation. A probable consequence of an act is one which is likely or which can reasonably be expected to follow from such an act Where a person instigated another to chastise or thrash the deceased with a lathi and that person killed the deceased by stabbing him with a spear-head, the existence of which was not known to the instigator, the abettor is not liable for abetment of murder, as the act of stabbing, though committed under the influence of the instigation, was not a probable consequence of the intigation to thrash. The words "who if absent would be liable to be punished as an abettor," clearly show that abetment to come under S. 114 must be one which is prior to the commission of the offence and complete by itself and not an abetment which is done immediately before or at the time of the commission of the offence, for in the latter case, the abettor would not have committed the abetment if he had not been present and would not therefore have been liable to punishment as an abettor. The essence of the offence of criminal conspiracy is agreement between two or more persons to commit an offence or do any of the other acts mentioned in S. 120-A in the matter described therein. Where the object of rebels who had formed into an association was to take action generally against Government and its supporters and they were recruiting people into their organisation and punishing those who refused to join and help the rebel Cause.

The Communist International openly advocated the violent overthrow of the Bourgeois order by means of the Communist revolution and its tactics comprised strikes, demonstrations, organisation of the masses into militant bodies, finally armed insurrection against the State power of the Bourgeoisie.

——S. 124 A—Charge of partiality against the Government—Government alleged to side with capitalists as against labourers.

The accused was a social worker. In a speech delivered at a labour meeting, she expressed the solidarity of the working class and its determination to fight and destroy the capitalist system; she referred to the resolve of the workers to fight against retrenchment and wage-out launched by the capitalists by organising a general strike. The labourers were asked to unite to fight the two enemies, the capitalists and the Government who being afraid of labour, were alleged to be vindictive towards leaders of labourer, and siding with capitalists as against the starving labourer. She emphasised the ultimate object as the establishment of the labour Raj by the methods of Mr.M.N. Roy.

Held, that the charge of gross partiality against the Government was calculated to inspire feelings of enmity and disaffection towards the Government and that was an offence under S. 124 A ; in the absence of any proof as to what were exactly the methods of Mr.M.N. The Hijli, Dacca and Chittagong incidents were described as successive stages of a well thought out scheme of terrorisation of the masses—a scheme to crush the manhood of the province and to make the province safe for bureaucratic administration and British Commerce. In order to punish persons for rioting it is not sufficient to show that they were members of an unlawful assembly but it should also be made out that force or violence was used by any member thereof in prosecution of the common object of such assembly. Where the specific acts of violence attributed to the accused have been disbelieved and the rest of the accused have all been acquitted, the conviction of the former is irregular and not sustainable. A perfectly lawful assembly of citizens may become later a riotous mob and in the mob there will be a number of innocent people who do not share the common object of the rioters. When a person however is found to be amongst a mob of rioters, the law presumes that he shares their common object and intention. If he does not share that common object and intention, the onus is upon him to prove his innocence. What the common object and intention of a mob is can only be inferred from its actions. Thus where a mob murdered certain men, the only inference which can be drawn is that the common object of the mob was murder. Therefore if any of the accused did not share that common object, it was for him to prove that fact. And if his defence practically is not that he was amongst the gathering of villagers with an innocent intention but that he was not there at all, he is bound to rebut the presumption that he shared in the common object of the mob. The accused was a social worker. Held, that the accused could not be convicted for promoting enmity and hatred against a class within the meaning of S. 153 A of the Penal Code as the term "capitalists" was altogether too vague to denote a definite and ascertainable class of sabjects.

Per Beaumont, C.J.—The speech was not also sufficiently strong to promote enmity or hatred against the capitalists.

Per Nanavutty, J.—The word "class' connotes a well-defined group of His Majesty's subjects. The first ingredient in the connotation of the term is that it should be well-defined and readily ascertainable; secondly, there should be some element of permanence or stability in the group, and thirdly, the group must be sufficiently numerous and widespread to be designated a class. The word "capitalists" is shifting in its meaning and relative in its connotation and cannot be taken to denote a class of subjects. (*Beaumont, C. ———S. 177—Doctor employed by Municipality—Municipality under contract with Government to submit post mortem reports—False report by doctor—If an offence under S. 177—Doctor not legally bound to Government.

The accused was a medical officer employed by the Municipality of Barsi. There was an arrangement between the Government and the Municipality by which a fee of Rs. 4 was to be paid to the medical officer for every medico legal case sent to him on behalf of the Government. Under the Civil Medical Code, R. 9, every post mortem examination should be complete. Two bodies were sent to the officer for such examination and the officer sent reports about them without in fact examining the bodies and with reference at least with one of the bodies, the medical officer should have known his report was false. On prosecution of the officer under S. 177 of the Penal Code.

Held, that (i) having regard to the definition of 'legally bound' in S. 43, Penal Code, that section covered a breach of contract and not merely a tort; the breach of contract should be one which furnishes ground for a civil action, that is to say, in respect of which damages could be obtained under S. 73 of the Contract Act or which could be enforced specifically. Here the contract to examine the body was one between the officer and the Municipality and as there was no evidence that the Municipality had suffered any damage by breach of the contract, it could not give rise to a civil action or to a prosecution under S. 177 of the Penal Code. 14 Mad. 484, Foll.; (ii) there was no contract between the officer and the Government and no obligation, therefore, on the officer to furnish information to Government within the meaning of S. 177 of the Penal Code, (iii) the conviction should be set aside. There is no provision in law that before a Magistrate can enquire into a case under S. 182 on the complaint of Police Officers, the accused person must have an opportunity of proving his case. Such a provision is unnecessary and even when the accused asks the Magistrate by a petition that his case might be investigated, conviction without such preliminary opportunity being given, is not illegal, at the most it may amount to error of discretion and is not error of law. The accused person in such a case has ample opportunity to prove his case when he is called upon to enter upon his defence and the requirement that the accused in such a case must have an opportunity to have the truth or falsity of his informa tion determined in a proper tribunal is satisfied when he gets such an opportunity. 14 C. 707 (F.B.); 14 C.W.N. 765, Expl. ——S. 182—Scope.

The offence contemplated under S. 182 consists in the giving of false information with the intent described in the two clauses. The question depends upon the bona fides of the accused. If he is reckless but honest, the section saves him for it does not punish those who merely blunder into giving false information but those who do it with an ulterior object in view, that object being to make a public servant to do or omit anything which such public servant ought not to do or omit or to use his lawful power to the injury of any person. It is the intention in the mind of the informant which forms an essential ingredient of the offence; it does not depend upon what is done or omitted to be done by a public servant on such false information. It is not enough to find that the accused had acted without due care or enquiry; it must be definitely proved that the accused knew there was no just or lawful ground for proceeding. Obstruction or no obstruction is essentially a question of fact depending on the facts and circumstances of each case, Mere threats of violence may not, in all cases, be sufficient evidence of obstruction. The real question is whether the action or attitude of the accused was such as to prevent the public servant in carrying out his duties. Where it is solely a matter of threats, they must be of such a nature so as to affect the public servant concerned as to cause him to abstain from proceeding with the execution of his duties. Threats by themselves may easily amount to an obstruction, if coupled 'with an aggressive or menacing attitude on the part of the persons uttering the threats and still more so if they are accompanied by the flourishing or even the exhibition of some kind of weapon capable of inflicting physical injury. 29 Cr L.J. 645, Ref. There had been unhappiness and mutual recrimination between the husband and wife which resulted in divorce proceedings. The husband some time later lodged a complaint of theft of money among some other things against the wife and during examination, when asked as to wherefrom he got the money, stated that he had taken it as a loan from a lady with whom he was living as a paying guest. The lady, when subsequently examined, was asked several other questions and in the course of such examination, one isolated question was put to her whether she had lent money to the husband. She replied the she had not done so as far as she could remember. On this the Magistrate came to the conclusion that the husband's statement was a deliberate falsehood and made a complaint under S. 125, Cr. P. Code, for prosecuting the husband under S. 193, Penal Code, for perjury.

Held, that the charge of perjury was a serious charge and should not be lightly made or based upon a mere isolated answer as in this case, that though the Magistrate had discretion as to whether or not he should give the accused an opportunity to show case as to why a complaint should not be made, still the Magistrate ought to have given notice to the accused so that he might have explained the circumstances under which he gave his evidence and that people are not to be trapped for purpose of prosecution for perjury but should be prosecuted only after a proper examination. In order successfully to prosecute a person under S. 211, it is necessary for the Crown to establish that his primary intention when he made the statement was to cause injury to the police officers mentioned by him. ——S. 215—Essentials of offence—Evidence not supporting conviction.

It is necessary in order to maintain a conviction under S. 215 to prove that the complainant had been deprived of the property by an offence punishable under the Code. Before the trial Magistrate he said that the bullocks had been stolen and that he had made a report to the police. It appeared that after filing the report he had gone to a certain person, and paid him money in order to secure the restoration of bullocks.

Held, that the evidence was wholly insufficient to prove exclusively that an offence punishable under the Penal Code had been committed in respect of the missing bullocks. 6 I C. 250 and 9 P.R. of 1915, Ref. ——S. 215—Offence under—Evidence—What prosecution should prove.

Where the accused merely undertakes to endeavour to trace out and restore the lost property on payment of some remuneration, then upon this circumstance alone the accused cannot be said to be guilty of an offence under S. 215, unless over and above that, the prosecution proves that the property has been lost by the commission of an offence and that the accused is endeavouring to screen the offender from justice and is not using all means in his power to cause the offender to be apprehended and convicted of the offence which he has committed. Though it is the primary duty of a vendor to take reasonable care that the weights he employs are correct and prima facie the use of incorrect measures may give rise to suspicion if not a presumption against the accused, the adverse inference is always open to rebuttal, as otherwise every case of possession or user of wrong weights and measures will necessarily have to end in conviction. The appellant was on the wrong side of the road, but he took all possible precautions by driving his car slowly and by putting his hand up to give his signal to the complainant when he saw the complainant's car coming on from the opposite direction at an excessive speed ; but in spite of all this, the unfortunate accident occurred. S. 283, I. P. Code, does not refer to any public nuisance or to the intention of the accused. It deals with an offence affecting the public health, safety, convenience, decency and morals, and it is enacted to protect persons in the exercise of their public right. An obstruction may be caused by negligence. ———S. 294 A—"Drawing any lottery."

A newspaper published a notice of a proposal for an alleged lottery managed by a Bank. The scheme was that the Bank issued a lac of ten rupee bonds which were redeemable at the end of 20 years by every holder who would receive Rs. 10-8 0. This money was to be invested and from interest a series of prizes were to be allotted yearly. Every bond holder who died within the ensuing year was treated as a prize winner. For the distribution of the rest of the prizes the number of the bond held by the deceased holder, whose death was first reported to the bank, was to be taken and ten added thereto, e.g., if the deceased's bond was No. 813, then the first prize winner would be the holder of the bond No. 823 and the remaining prizes were distributed by adding ten, e.g., 833, 843, 853, etc , until the prizes were exhausted. The prizes although allotted by chance were not drawn in the manner generally accepted and were derived entirely from interest and not capital.

Held, that the scheme published was a lottery but there was however no physical or mechanical 'drawing' to determine the lucky lots which depended on an original number to be determined on a sort of arithmetical progression based on an original number to be determined merely by the chance of a bond holder and that the publication of a scheme involving such a lottery was therefore no offence. After 3 hours he regained consciousness, his dying declaration was recorded and he was sent at 8 p.m to Calcuta by train. After arrival there the next morning another operation was performed on him but he died at 7 p.m. that day. The death was due to acute peritonitis caused by the perforation of the gun by a shot entering his body. It was found that the intention of the gunner in shooting was only to cause some injury as would disable the victim from going away or offering resistance and that the light was flashed only to spot out the victim. It was also found that shots were directed towards a comparatively lower part of the body and that killing was not the intention of the party. If an accused person wishes to take advantage of one of the Exceptions to S. 300, the burden is primarily on him to show that his act falls within the exception concerned. However when an ignorant or ill-defended person is being tried, it is open to the Court and proper for the Court to examine the evidence in order to see whether it discloses facts which will bring the act of the accused within any of the Exceptions. But if the accused does not set up such a plea, it is not for the Court to speculate upon mere possibilities. There must certainly be some basis found for the plea in the evidence. Where the accused were charged under S. 302 read with S. 149 of the Penal Code but the jury found them guilty of murder substantively and the Judge, accepting their verdict, convicted them under S. 302,

Held, that as there was so consequent disadvantage to the accused and the accused would have had to adduce no further evidence, the conviction under S. 302, even without a substantive charge of murder framed against them under that section alone was not improper. In a trial for an offence under S. 302 the Court should not first consider the evidence establishing a motive for the murder. Where two accused persons decoyed a woman under pretence of taking her to see another person, strangled her on the way and put her body on the railway line so that the train might run over it thereby obliterating all traces of their crime and the train ran over her body and killed her and the following facts emerged out of the case, namely, (1) that an intention to kill the woman was clearly proved, (2) that it was in pursuance of a deliberate plan, (3) that the accused placed her body across the railway line, (4) that it was that act which caused her death, (5) that the accused did not put forward the case that they believed the woman to be dead when her body was put on the railway track, (6) that the marks of a struggle and the body having been dragged and the discovery of a woman's thali at that spot proved nothing more than a struggle, and (7) that there was some slight medical evidence regarding marks of strangulation,

Held, that the accused were guilty of murder. The intention with which the accused struggled with the woman cannot be separated from the intention with which they put her body across the line, that the two acts were intimately connected with each other and the latter act followed immediately upon the former, that both the acts of the accused must be treated as being only one transaction, the transaction being to kill the woman, and that the most favourable inference that could possibly be drawn in favour of the accused is that they acted with a reckless indifference and ignorance as to whether the woman was alive or dead at the time when her body was put across the railway line. If the accused intended to cause the death of a person and in furtherance of that intention did an act which did not in fact cause the death of that person, but in the belief that the act has caused death, the accused did another act, for example, for the purpose of hiding the traces of his crime and such act resulted in death, the accused should be convicted of murder and not any lesser offence. If a man stabs, shoots or hangs a person recklessly indifferent as to whether the body he handles is alive or dead, he should suffer the consequences of his act. The intention to kill is manifest; the two acts follow closely upon one another and must be treated as one transaction. If it has resulted in death, the accused is guilty of murder. At the time when the boy disappeared, the husband of the 2nd accused was away from home and the two women were alone. Two days later the 1st accused was observed throwing the dead body of the boy from her roof on to the adjacent roof and the 2nd accused attempting to screen her with a cloth. ——— S. 302—Poisoning—Charge of arsenic poisoning—Proof of—Evidence of post mortem examination insufficient.

In a charge of murder by arsenic poisoning, it is essential for the prosecution to prove (a) that the person alleged to have been murdered died of arsenic poisoning, and (b) that the accused person administered arsenic to the deceased with intent to murder. The evidence of the Civil Surgeon making the post mortem examination of the stomach and intestines of the deceased that from the history and the post mortem appearance of the stomach and intestines he was of opinion that death was due to an irritant poison of the nature of arsenic, is not sufficient to prove death by arsenic poisoning. It is not possible to be certain by a naked eye post mortem examination of the stomach and intestines that death was due to arsenic poisoning. Post mortem appearances similar to those observed in undoubted cases of arsenic poisoning are also similar to those produced by certain natural diseases, and other irritant poisons. In a case of murder by poison, there are three main points to be proved: firstly, did the deceased die of the poison in question; secondly, had the accused got the poison in question in his or her possession: and thirdly, had the accused an opportunity to administer the poison in question to the deceased. If these three points are proved, a presumption may under certain circumstances be drawn by the Court that the accused did administer poison to the deceased and did cause the death of the deceased. The evidence of motive which is frequently given in these cases is of subsidiary importance, and the mere fact that the accused had a motive to cause the death of the deceased is not a fact which will dispense with the proof of the second and third points that the accused had the poison in his or her possession, and, that the accused had an opportunity to administer the poison. The accused had illicit relations with a woman with the connivance of her husband for about 11 years. After the death of the husband, the woman commenced intrigues with another man. The accused remonstrated with her, but she did not mind. The woman was thereupon killed by the accused.

Held, that although the relations between the accused and the deceased were illicit but having regard to human nature it was natural that after a long period of years the accused should look on deceased as his woman and as a woman who was bound to render him fidelity. Under these circumstances the commencement of an intrigue between the woman and another man was a matter which would cause provocation to the accused. Held, that the case clearly fell under S. 302, and though the provocation was not such as to take the offence out of the provisions of S. 302, I. P. Velocity of a vehicle is not the only criterion of rash and negligent driving. Driving a car recklessly until it comes so close to a pedestrian that it is impossible to save a collision cannot but be characterised as rash and negligent driving. Mere negligence on the part of a pedestrian can not excuse negligence on the part of a driver of such a fast and dangerous vehicle as a motor bus. As between the pedestrian and a driver of a motor vehicle the responsibility of the latter is greater. He has a duty to keep better outlook than a pedestrian. A driver of a motor vehicle who is himself negligent cannot plead in his defence the negligence of a pedestrian whom he knocked unconscious and killed. The deceased while coming from the opposite direction along his right side of the road was knocked down by a bus driven by the accused. The road was straight and absolutely clear of traffic so as to give the accused a full view of the road over a considerable distance and a careful driver could well have seen a pedestrian coming from opposite direction and have avoided the risk of a collision by swerving the car in time. It was quite possible for the accused to have averted the collision in spite of the negligence of the deceased by leaving a sufficient margin for the man to pass.

———S. 307—Applicability—Essentials—Injuries inflicted not capable of causing death according to medical evidence—Conviction—Sustainability—Intention—Inference.

For a conviction under S. 307, there must be an act done under such circumstances that death might be caused if the act took effect. The act must be capable of causing death in the natural and ordinary course of things; and if it is not of that description the assailant is not guilty of the offence of attempt to murder. Where the doctor treating the injuries, who is the best person to describe the exact nature of the injuries and their natural effect, does not say that the injuries inflicted by the accused are sufficient in the ordinary course to cause death, an intention to cause death cannot be deduced from the nature of the injuries and their natural and probable consequences. In the absence of evidence to show an intention to kill, a conviction under S. 307 is not justified. The accused can only be convicted under S. 326. ———S. 307—Conviction under—Essentials.

The scope of S. 307 is very clear. The intention or knowledge, which is necessary to constitute murder, may exist combined with an act which falls short of the complete commission of that offence. The murderer may do an act towards the commission of the murder, but may involuntarily fail or be intercepted, or prevented from consummating the crime. To justify a conviction under S 307, therefore, it is not essential that actual injury capable of causing death should have been inflicted. Although the nature of the injuries caused may often give considerable assistance to a Court in coming to a finding as to the intention of the accused, such intention may also be deduced from other circumstances, and may even in some cases be ascertained without reference at all to the actual wounds inflicted upon the person attacked. The object too is irrelevant. The only thing that has got to be seen is the motive. Accused No. 1 was a Civil Court peon and accused No. 2 a holder of a decree against the complainant. In execution of that decree complainant was arrested under a warrant by accused No. 1 at 3 P.M. within the Court house compound on a day on which he had attended Court in connection with his criminal case which was going on. Accused No. 2 identified the complainant as the judgment-debtor to be arrested. He was taken to the Civil Court, but as the Judge was busy otherwise, he was detained till 5 P.M., when he was produced in Court. The Judge, after hearing him ordered him to be released under S. 135 (2), C. P. Code. Complainant then instituted complaints under S. 343, I. P Code, against accused No. 1 and under Ss. 342 and 109, I. P. Code, against accused No. 2.

Held, (1) that there was no wrongful detention of the complainant by accused No. 1 under S 342, I. P. Code, in having detained the complainant till 5 P M., nor did he act criminally in effecting the arrest as it was not his duty to enquire into the truth or otherwise of the complainant's allegation of exemption from arrest; (2) that the act of the peon not being an offence, the decree-holder too was not guilty of any abetment of an offence. When questioned, the girl said that the accused poked her there with his finger.

Held, per Jack, J.—Under S 354, it must be shown that the assault was made intending to outrage or knowing it to be likely to outrage the modesty of the girl. The conduct of the girl showed that in fact her modesty was not outraged. There was no suggestion that she had any hesitation in telling her mother exactly what had happened. It was therefore doubtful whether in fact the modesty of the girl was outraged, and that therefore the conviction ought not to have been under S. 354. As a matter of fact the charge might have been under S. 323. Medical evidence showed that there was injury. In view of the nature of the offence, the sentence should be maintained but it should be under S. 323.

In order to compel a boy to go in any direction against his will it is a common practice to put a pagri round his neck and to drag him, and though it may no doubt be somewhat dangerous, if he resists overmuch, or if the ground over which he is taken is hilly or broken, still, generally speaking, the practice leads to no more evil consequences than a swollen neck; and it cannot be said as a fact that it is imminently dangerous to life. Where therefore the accused put his safa round the neck of a boy on his refusal to accompany him to a certain place and proceeded to drag him for a distance of about 50 or 60 yards as a result of which the boy subsequently died.

Held, that an offence under S 357 had been committed by the accused and not one under S. 304-A. The mere fact that the minor leaves the protection of her guardian does not put her out of the guardianship's keeping, and so long as the girl has an opportunity of going back to her guardian, the relationship of guardianship continues. A girl who has no intention of starting life independently and who leaves her house for the purpose of seeking refuge with another relation, cannot be deemed to have passed out of the "keeping" of her natural guardian under the Explanation to S. 361, until she has, by some overt act, passed into the keeping of some one else. The expression 'Lawful guardian' is extended to include any person lawfully entrusted with the care or custody of a minor, or other person. Where, by consent of the relatives, a minor has been allowed to be in the custody of a particular relative, the consent of the relatives would be quite sufficient to make the guardianship lawful guardianship, though there may be no definite transaction of entrustment. Hence where the accused had kidnapped a little girl under 12 years of age with intention to give her in marriage a presumptio juris et de jure does not arise that the accused kidnapped the child with intent to compel her, or knowing that it to be likely that she will be compelled to marry "against her will". ———S. 366—Construction—"Seduced to illicit intercourse"—Intrigue while girl is in lawful custody—Offence if constituted.

In order to make S. 366 applicable, the act of seduction alleged must be subsequent to the kidnapping. The Section cannot apply to a case where the accused is said to have been carrying on an intrigue with a girl under 16 while she is in the custody of her lawful guardian and goes away with her because obstacles are thrown in the way of that intrigue even though when he so goes away with her it was with the intention of illicit intercourse. The phrase 'seduced to illicit intercourse' implies two distinct stages in the acts of the accused, the seduction and the illicit intercourse. There must be two distinct acts, though they may follow on immediate sequence. The words or actions of the accused which induced the girl to submit to the illicit intercourse must precede the actual act. The term 'seduction' can only properly be held applicable to the first act of illicit intercourse, unless there be proof of a return to chastity on the part of the girl meanwhile, or unless possibly there is an intention on the accused's part that the girl should be seduced by some different man. ———S. 366—Construction—"Seduced to illicit intercourse"—Prior immoral conduct—Relevancy.

The expression "seduced to illicit intercourse" in S. 366 cannot be intended to be restricted to inducing a girl to surrender her chastity for the first time. It is used to indicate a distinction between "seduction" in the popular, usual or ordinary sense and that which S. 366 was intended to cover. "illicit intercourse" seems to be intended, to be synonymous with "unlawful sexual intercourse". "Seduced to illicit intercourse" means "induced to surrender or abandon a condition of purity from unlawful sexual intercourse." Therefore an accused cannot be convicted of the offence under S. 366 unless it is proved that the girl was leading a life pure from unlawful sexual intercourse at the time when the kidnapping took place. It is not necessary to prove that the girl has never at any time surrendered her condition of purity from unlawful sexual intercourse. She may have surrendered it in the past, and thereafter have resumed a life of purity. On the other hand if she is already leading a life of indulgence in unlawful sexual intercourse at the time of the kidnapping, it cannot be said that she was kidnapped "in order that she might be seduced to illicit intercourse" within the meaning of the section In such a case the accused could not have kidnapped her in order that she might be led astray in conduct, or drawn away from the right course of action into a wrong one, because she was already astray, and was pursuing a wrong course at the time of the kidnapping. "Seduce" in S. 366, means enticing or tempting. It is used in the general sense and not in the limited sense of committing the first act of illicit intercourse. S. 366 would therefore apply to a person who has had sexual intercourse with the kidnapped girl even before the alleged kidnapping takes place, and such a person can be charged under the Section. It is the illicit nature of the intercourse for which the kidnapping or abduction takes place that constitutes the aggravation of the offence and not the priority in point of time of such intercourse. If the accused kidnapped or abducted the woman with the necessary intent, the offence is complete whether or not the accused succeeded in effecting his purpose, and even if in the event the woman in fact consented to the marriage or the illicit intercourse taking place. When the law presumes the affirmative, then the negative is to be proved. Thus where it is admitted by the complainant that there had been sexual intercourse between a man and a woman, the mere cohabitation affords an inference of greater or less strength that a marriage has been solemnized between them. The law therefore presumes against vice and immorality and on this ground the presumption is strongly in favour of marriage. Sodomy is one of those offences for which there can be hardly any extenuating circumstances; and even if so, it cannot justify an over-lenient sentence of 4 months' rigorous imprisonment. And in order to render the other dacoits liable under S. 396 for the act of one of their associates, it is not necessary that murder should have been within the contemplation of all or some of them when the dacoity was planned, nor is it necessary that they should have actually taken part in, or abetted its commission; indeed they may not have been present at the scene of murder, or may not have known even that murder was going to be, or had in fact been, committed. Accused produced a receipt purporting to be granted by the proprietor of the estate and a shiaha for a corresponding amount. The Magistrate thought that the receipt was suspicious, the signature thereto being not genuine and that the shiaha was unreal and in the result convicted him. Held, that the appellate Court had not considered the effect of explanation I of S. 403, I. P. Where property is delivered under a trust the sale proceeds of property entrusted are also subject to the trust "property" will include cash into which it is converted; if there is as express or implied term in the agreement or trust. The suggestion that it is the intention or knowledge with which the money is ultimately paid to the agent by a third party which governs the question whether there is a trust or not is fallacious. Applicant stood surety to a fishery lessee for the due payment of fishery revenue due from the latter and offered certain lands purported to be free from encumbrances, as part of the security. As a matter of fact, a portion of the land offered as security was heavily mortgaged. On default of the lessee to pay an instalment, proceedings were taken against the surety and his property was sold, but the sale was set aside on the surety paying the purchase-money interest and cost. The lease was cancelled as a result of the above default and the fishery was resold, and the deficit caused thereby was sought to be recovered from the surety, who could pay only a part of the deficit amount. Held, setting aside the conviction, that the proceedings did not show that the applicant had any intention of causing damage or harm by his act; nor could it be shown that his act was even likely to cause damage or harm, as it might well be that in spite of the fact that his land was encumbered, the applicant was confident of his ability to pay up any amount which might be due

———S. 420—Cheating—"Snow ball" scheme—Company for advancing loans—Speculative and risky conditions—No misrepresentation—Fraud not proved—Conviction for cheating not sustainable.

Accused No. 1 was the promoter of "The Delhi Syndicate, Ld."; accused 2 and 3 were agents. The Articles of Association, Memorandum and forms of applications for loans contained all the conditions governing the grant and the refund of loans. The object of the company was to advance money to poor and needy persons at one and half per cent. per annum, repayable after about 5 to 8 years. The main idea of the scheme was to grant loans by four unequal instalments to each applicant. As soon as fifteen loan candidates were registered, loans would be advanced to each candidate in turn, by drawing lots; if a candidate was not able to get the full loan nor free cash bonus nor any part loan, he would be refunded his candidature fee on an application for refund.

Held, that although the scheme may be very highly speculative and in a sense somewhat chimerical, still nothing was concealed from the public and everything was disclosed, not only as to how the loans were to be granted but also as to how it was to be refunded. The scheme might be speculative and the public, if they invested any money, ran a risk of losing their money but it could not be said that it was started with a dishonest intention of cheating the public. If a man carrying on a retail trade orders goods from his wholesale dealer and then becomes insolvent before he is able to pay for them, the Court is not entitled to infer he had a dishonest intention of not paying for them. A man in embarrassed circumstances is not bound to disclose all his circumstances to people with whom he deals on credit. Of course he is not entitled to make any untrue statement. If, for instance, he orders goods on credit and promises expressly or impliedly to pay for them on a particular date and the prosecution proves that at the date of the contract the circumstances of the accused were such that he must have known that it was practically impossible that he would be able to pay for the goods, then that would be a case of cheating. But the mere fact that the accused was in embarrassed circumstances at the date of contract is not sufficient, without more, to prove an intention to cheat.

The execution proceedings were thereafter transferred to the Deputy Commissioner under S. 68, C. P. Code. In order to establish a charge of criminal trespass under S. 441, I. P. Code, it is essential for the prosecution to prove the intention laid down in the section, i.e., intent to annoy, etc. Intention must always be gathered from the circumstances of the case. One matter which has to be considered is no doubt the consequences which naturally flow from the act complained of, because a man is usually presumed to intend the consequences of his own act. But that is only one element from which the Court has to discover the intention of the party trespassing. The Court must find out what the real intention is, i.e., whether it was to annoy or something else, and whether the annoyance is a mere consequence, possibly foreseen, but not intended or desired. If it is the latter, there is no offence. Where the act of trespass is committed with the intention of asserting a supposed legal right, there is no offence which will justify a conviction under S. 448, I. P. Code. When a person becomes a party to ante-dating a document, his intention is obviously to make the act appear to have been done at a time when it was not done, and by force of such a falsity to give it an operation which in truth and justice it ought not to have; the act therefore amounts to forgery. When a man is charged with the doing of an act of which the probable consequence may be highly injurious, the intention is an inference of law resulting from the doing of the act. PENAL CODE (1860), S. 467.

The essence of forgery is fraud and the prosecution must prove fraud. The accused, who was the local representative of a firm, sent a petition to the Municipal Council praying for restoration of his name as voter or for registering his name as the authorised nominee of the firm entitled to vote for the firm. It appeared that he had used a blank paper already containing the signatures of his other partner, the latter being in the habit of giving such blank papers in the course of business for the purpose of Civil Court proceedings. The evidence however disclosed that the accused had carte planche to use as he chose the blank signed papers sent to him, provided they were used for the firm's business.

Held, that the user of the blank papers for sending petition to the Municipality was legitimate, there was no deceit or fraud, and the prosecution of the accused for offences under Ss. 467 and 471, I. P. Code, was not sustainable. (Wallace, J.) GURULINGIAH v. EMPEROR. 1932 M.W N. 117.

——Ss. 476, 478 and 482—Trade-mark—Test of invented word—Question of fact.

A mere ordinary addition to, or mis-spelling or variation of, a word in use in the English language does not make the word so formed an invented word but the question in each case is one of fact. The test of an invented word is that it must have been substantially new at the date of registration; or have been substantially new when first used by the applicant and have been only used to denote his goods down to the date of registration. It is not necessary that its production should have involved any great ingenuity or anything like invention in the sense in which the term is used in patent law. The word "Aguerine" not being an ordinary English word nor a combination of two ordinary English words must be regarded as a fit subject of a trade-mark. The fact that the word coined by the complainant to denote the name of his fever mixture and registered as a trade-mark has been copied by another does not absolve the accused from the consequences of copying it. A person who employs a label which in general resembles the label used by another manufacturer is guilty of counterfeiting the trade-mark, even though the registered trade-mark of the one be

A person may secrete a document not only when the existence of the document is unknown to other persons and for the purpose of preventing the existence of the document coming to the knowledge of anybody but also when the existence of the document is known to others. In the latter case he may secrete it for the purpose, for example, of preventing it being produced in evidence or for the purpose of raising difficulties in the way of its being produced in evidence. But it is not necessarily enough to show that upon an occasion upon which it became his duty to produce the document he failed to discharge that duty, even though this may be cogent evidence in certain circumstances. The fact that a man perjures himself by denying the existence of a document which to his knowledge is in his custody would be a still more cogent piece of evidence. But whether the offence of secreting the document is committed or not depends on the circumstances.

Of course the taking must be with the "intention" stated in the section. PENAL CODE (1860), S. 499.

Caste Panchayat.

——Ss. 499 and 500—Caste panchayat—Report of proceedings in caste meeting.

Where a caste leader signed a vernacular document containing an innocent statement of what had passed at a caste meeting to the effect that certain honours were not to be accorded to the complainant and that the latter had been ex-communicated, no case of defamation has been made out. (Jackson, J.) RANGIAH CHETTY v. ABHOY CHETTY. 1931 M.W.N. 407.

——S. 499, Exception 9—Caste panchayat—Ex-communication by panchayat—Good faith—Inference from circumstances.

At a particular meeting of the panchayat of a particular community, the complainant was ex-communicated. It appeared that this was done after charges had been made against the complainant and after he was given full opportunity to meet the charges, though he did not avail himself of such opportunity. The punches were prosecuted for an offence under S. 499 in having communicated the resolution to others.

Held, that good faith could be presumed under the circumstances and that the accused were not liable to be convicted in the absence of direct evidence of malice. (Batpai, J.) DASAI v. EMPEROR. I.R. 1932 All. 332 = 137 I.C. 499 = 33 Cr.L.J. 472 (2) = 1932 A.L.J. 75 = 13 L.R. 63 (Cr.).

——S. 499, Exception 9—Caste panchayat—Information given to—Imputation contained in—Offence.

Accused received information that complainant had committed theft at his house. Being satisfied that the information was true, he communicated the same in that bona fide belief to the leaders of his caste panchayat who outcasted the complainant.

Held, the case fell under the ninth exception to S. 492, I. P. Code, as there was nothing objectionable in the accused warning his caste people about the complainant's conduct so as to induce the latter to mend the latter's ways, although the imputation was one of commission of an offence.

Held, further, that the question whether the panchayat had jurisdiction or not was immaterial, as the imputation was made in good faith for the protection of the public in general. (Niyogi, A.J.C.) EMPEROR v. MT. DULARIBAI. 18 N.L.J. 204.

——S. 499, Exception 9—Caste panchayat—Statement as to person being outcasted—Ex-communication by panchayat as defence.

To say that a man is outcasted when he is not so is defamation. It is established law that the members of the caste cannot as individuals take the law into their hands and declare a person to be outcasted. Where the caste panchayat gave every one full liberty to dine or not to dine with the complainant and the accused asserted, in spite of contradiction, that the complainant had been ex communicated by the panchayat, which they knew was not correct,

Held, that they could not claim the benefit of exception 9 to S. 499. (Grille, A.J.C.) BABULAL v. TUNDILAL. 28 N.L.R. 106 = I.R. 1932 Nag. 112 = 33 Cr.L.J. 835 = 139 I.C. 401 = 1932 Cr.C. 519 = A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 97.

——S. 499, Exceps. 9 and 10—Caste panchayat—Person charged with social offence—Communication to panchayat.

The control of the panchayat is beneficial and that control cannot be exercised unless the conduct of the offender is brought to the notice of the panchayat. Hence a person who brings to the notice of the panchayat the behaviour of a person who is guilty of a social offence is not guilty under S. 499, but comes under Exceptions 9 and 10 of S. 499. Civil proceedings.

——Ss. 499 and 500—Civil proceedings—Complaint in respect of proceedings in Civil Court—Duty of Court.

It is undesirable that people should be hampered in their access to the Courts and in getting justice by the fear that if they are unsuccessful they may be prosecuted for defamation. All Courts should be careful when a complaint of defamation is filed in respect of proceedings in a Civil Court to see whether the provisions of S. 209, I.P. Code, read with S. 195 (b), Cr. P. ——S. 499—Civil proceedings—Defamation complaint in respect of Civil Court proceedings—Duty of Court.

As a general rule it is undesirable that people should be hampered in their access to the Courts and in getting justice by the fear that if they are unsuccessful they may be prosecuted for defamation, and therefore all Courts should be careful when a complaint of defamation is filed in respect of proceedings in a Civil Court to see whether the provisions of S. 209, I. ——Ss. 499 and 500—Civil proceedings—Defamatory statements in—Complaint in respect of—Maintainability.

A Criminal Court is not debarred from entertaining a complaint in respect of defamatory statements made in the course of civil proceedings during the pendency of those proceedings. So long as the ingredients of the offence of defamation are present, a Magistrate is bound to receive the complaint and proceed according to law. When a person is charged with defamation, his guilt or innocence must be determined solely with reference to the I. P. Code. (Ramachandra Rao, J.) SEETHARAMIAH v. SANNATHAMMANNA. 12 Mys.L.J. 464 = 39 Mys. H.C.R. 729.

Collection of persons.

——S. 499, Expl 2—Collection of persons—Defamatory article against girls of a college—Prosecution instituted by some of the girls—Maintainability.

The essence of the offence of defamation is the publication of an imputation with the knowledge that it will harm the reputation of the person defamed. Where the defamatory articles published in a paper imply that the girls of a certain college are habitually guilty of the misbehaviour described in the articles, the inevitable effect on the reader must be to make him believe that it is habitual with the girls of the college to behave in this way. That being so, all the girls in the college collectively and each girl individually must suffer in reputation. A prosecution for defamation instituted by some of the girls of the college is, therefore, maintainable. Company.

PENAL CODE (1860), S. 499.

Where a letter suggests that a company gives guarantees which are worthless and that it endeavours to avoid its liability under the guarantees given, it suggests that the company is a deceitful company and that persons dealing with that company should be on their guard and take particular care to see that they are not cheated. Such imputations are undoubtedly defamatory. (Mackney, J.) C.T.N.R. NARAYANAN CHETTIAR v. EMPEROR. 37 Cr.L.J. 328 = 160 I.C. 746 = 8 R.R. 424 = 1935 Cr.C. 1295 = A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 509.

The accused bought a watch of a company, who executed guarantee for 2 years. The watch was out of order within 6 months ; so he took it to the company for repairs as per guarantee. Company agreed to do the repairs on payment. Thereupon he published a letter in newspaper defaming the company.

Held, that the mere fact that when he took the watch to the company and asked to have it repaired they demanded a fee for repairing it, did not justify him in imputing dishonesty to them. Corporation.

———S. 499—Corporation—Prosecution for libel—Right to maintain.

A corporation may maintain a prosecution or an action for a libel affecting its property, but not for a libel merely affecting personal reputation, as a corporation has no reputation apart from its property or trade. The words complained of must reflect on the management of its business and must injuriously affect the corporation, as distinct from the individuals who compose it. The alleged libel must attack the corporation in its method of conducting its affairs, must accuse it of fraud or mismanagement, or must attack its financial position. It cannot bring a prosecution for words which merely affect its honour or dignity. ———S. 504—'Insult'—What amounts to.

The provocation given by the use of insulting language need not actually result in a breach of the peace or the commission of an offence. It is enough if from the surrounding circumstances it can be reasonably inferred that the offender intended or knew that the provocation given by him was such as would be likely to result in a breach of the peace or the commission of an offence. As to what constitutes insult depends on the calm dispassionate opinion of the Judge whether the act complained of from its nature and attendant circumstances was calculated to insult and was done with intent to insult the complainant and it does not depend on the sensitive feelings of the complainant. ———S. 504—Vulgar abuse—Insult.

In order to substantiate a charge of insult, the words must amount to something more than "mere vulgar abuse". If abusive language is used in such circumstances that the Court comes to the conclusion that it cannot possibly have been intended and cannot have been understood by those to whom it was addressed to have been intended, to be taken literally, then the language cannot be held to amount to an intentional insult. ———S. 12—Suit in Civil Court for share of political pension—Decree in terms of compromise—Claim to pension abandoned under compromise, in lieu of monthly allowance—Validity of compromise.

The plaintiff's predecessor sued the defendant's predecessor for a declaration of his right to a share of a political pension. Permission was obtained by him under S. 6 of the Pensions Act from the Collector for this suit to be heard by the Civil Court. The suit terminated by a decree in terms of a compromise entered into by the parties. Under the compromise, it was agreed that the plaintiff's predecessor and his representatives were entitled to get a monthly allowance generation after generation from the defendant's predecessor and his representatives, in lieu of the plaintiff's predecessor abandoning his claim not only to his alleged share in the political pension but also to his share in the property inherited by the defendant's predecessor. In a suit by the plaintiffs against the defendants for arrears of the monthly allowance, Held, by Bennet, J., that the particular part of the compromise by which the plaintiff's predecessor relinquished all his right to the pension would be null and void in view of the provisions of S. 12 of the Pensions Act, but that the compromise would still be a valid compromise as the consideration of relinquishment of right to the property was a perfectly good consideration, and that the compromise was binding on the defendants to the extent of the property in their hands left by their predecessor.

Held, by Sulaiman, C.J., that the compromise decree was not hit by the provisions of S. 12 at all, as an abandonment of the claim to have the question of right to the pension tried by the Court would not in itself amount to an assignment of any share in the political pension, but merely the withdrawal of the suit in lieu of the consideration offered, and that the offer made by the plaintiff's predecessor to abandon his claim to the property as well as to the pension to which he might have been entitled when made in a pending suit which had been instituted after obtaining the certificate of the Collector and which was in every way cognizable by the Civil Court, was not unlawful or invalid, and that the compromise decree was binding on the defendants to the extent of the property which was in their possession.

These at all events, where not claimed by the Crown, will be assumed to be in the zemindar If a claimant to subsoil rights holds under the zemindar, or by a grant emanating from him, even though his powers may be permanent, heritable and transferable, he must still prove the express inclusion of the subsoil rights. 44 C. 841 (P.C.) and 44 C. 585 (P.C.), Ref. to. Held, it was doubtful whether the District Magistrate was acting judicially or as a Court when exercising powers under the Places of Public Resort Act; assuming that the officer concerned is one to whom the writ could be issued, when it is found that the proceedings are entirely within the jurisdiction and powers of the District Magistrate, and there is no question of usurpation or excess of jurisdiction, there is no ground for the issue of a writ of prohibition (Varadachariar, J.) GHULAM MOHIDEEN SAHIB v. DT. But the plaintiff ignored the objection and did not choose to add the prayer for possession. Ten years later, in appeal, the plaintiff prayed for leave to amend the plaint by adding a prayer for possession.

Held, that the plaintiff having deliberately refused to amend his plaint where the defect was brought to his notice immediately after the plaint was filed, it would be improper to allow an amendment at that late stage; and in the absence of any exceptional reason to overlook the plaintiff's determination to maintain the suit in its original form up to that moment, the Court would not be justified in allowing the amendment prayed for at that very late stage. *(Reilly, C. In a suit for rent as in a suit for ejectment against a tenant, alleging the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to set out his own title, because the tenant is estopped from denying that his landlord who put him in possession of the land then had title to do so or that he had title to receive the rent. The question may arise whether in a suit for rent the ordinary rule should be relaxed that a plaintiff is not bound to anticipate a defence that his title would be denied. A Mukhtar of the principal filed an Income-tax return on the former's behalf, the return having been signed and verified by the Mukhtar himself. Held, (1) that though the Mukhtarnama did not expressly mention the Income-tax Department, yet the words "other Government departments," were wide enough to include that department; but the power of attorney did not, however, give the agent any authority to sign or verify the return of income for the purposes of assessment of income-tax and that the said return could not be regarded as an application or written statement; (2) that the powers conferred upon the agent having been definitely set forth in the document, there was no justification for going outside its terms; (3) that the act of the principal in causing the accounts to be produced in accordance with the notice of the Income-tax Officer, did not constituted a ratification of the act of the agent in respect of the return; and (4) that the Income-tax authorities not having in any way changed their position for the worse on account of any implied representation of the assessee as to the agent's authority to sign and verify the return, no question of estoppel arose against the assessee. borrow for that purpose. An authority to purchase does not necessarily imply an authority to borrow. There is a strong improbability that a principal intends to give his agent to power to borrow money if he does expressly state it; and when there is evidence to show that the principal has made other special arrangements for the supply of funds that the agent might require, the authority to borrow is clearly negatived and the borrowing by the agent is not authorised by the power of attorney. Abandonment of plea.

———Abandonment of plea—Judgment mentioning specifically points argued before him—Scope of presumption that other points in memorandum of appeal are abandoned—Practice.

Where a Judge mentions specifically certain points which were argued before him and the judgment is silent on other points taken in the memorandum of appeal, it may be presumed that such points have been abandoned; but where the Judge after mentioning the points specifically argued before him, states that on merits too there is no force in the objections taken, it cannot be held that the other points have been abandoned. ———Abandonment of plea—Objections disallowed by first Court—Some only considered by the appellate Court—Presumption.

Several objections had been taken to an execution sale in the first Court which rejected the objections but set aside the sale on some technical ground. The appellate Court had confirmed the sale but had not considered any of the other objections to the sale. Those objections had been disallowed by the Munsif, and had not been pressed before the appellate Court by either side.

Held, that the petitioners ought to have pressed all their objections in the appellate Court, in case the appellate Court decided against them differing from the lower Court, and so it should be presumed that those objections had been abandoned by the petitioners in the lower appellate Court. ———Abandonment of plea—Plea of legal necessity—Second appeal.

The questions whether certain item out of consideration for alienation by widow was for legal necessity or not involves first an inquiry into the facts, into the nature of the loan and the reason for it and the pressure upon the estate at the time. Where therefore this inquiry is shut out in the lower appellate Court by the omission of the appellant to challenge the same, the matter cannot be re opened in second appeal (Bose, O. A. J C.) FULSING v. GANESH PRASAD. I.R. 1931 Nag 118 = 133 I.C. 390 = 14 N.L.J. 84 = A.I.R 1931 Nag. 147.

———Abandonment of plea—Plea of limitation given up by Counsel—Plea if open on appeal.

Counsel for the defendant definitely gave up the plea regarding limitation after the evidence of all the issues had been taken.

Held, that the question was one of law, that the party was not bound by the statement of his Counsel and that as the opposite party was not prejudiced the plea can be taken in appeal by the party. ———Abandonment of plea—Plea of res judicata.

———Abandonment of plea by pleader—Effect of.

If it is a mere question of law that has to be argued, a statement by the pleader "that he does not press it though he does not abandon it" may not stand in the way of the question being re-argued in the Appellate Court. But if it involves a question of fact and one does not press it, merely saying that he does not abandon it is of no avail and the question cannot be allowed to be ragued afresh. Abstract questions.

———Abstract questions—Reference to courts—Advisability.

The advisability of propounding for the consideration of the Court abstract question or questions involving considerations of debatable fact is, to say the least, doubtful; and it is undesirable that the Court should be called upon to express opinions which may affect the rights of persons not represented before it or touching matters of such a nature that its answers must be wholly ineffectual with regard to parties who are not and who cannot be brought before it, for example, foreign Governments. PRACTICE—Appeal.

———Appeal—New plea.

A point not dealt with in the order under appeal, and not mentioned in the written memorandum of appeal, if raised at the preliminary hearing of the appeal and noted at the time notice is issued to the respondents does not take the respondents by surprise, and can be considered in appeal specially when it is a question of law apparent on the face on the record. (Middleton, J.C.) TIKAYA RAM KHUSHAL RAM v. GHANSHAM DAS. 6 R. Pesh. 41 = 147 I.C. 837 = A.I.R. 1934 Pesh. 3.

———Appeal—New plea.

Where the appellants did not take a plea in the lower Court nor raised it in the grounds of appeal but submitted it as an additional ground of appeal, the appellants were not allowed to raise this new point on appeal for deciding which it was necessary to take evidence. (Middleton, J.C. and Mir Ahmad, A.J.C.) ARJAN SINGH BHAJAN SINGH v. SURJAN SINGH. 155 I.C. 1006 = 7 R. Pesh. 106 = A.I.R. 1935 Pesh. 44.

———Appeal—New plea—Alternative case on admitted facts.

It is not open an appellant to urge a point for the first time in the High Court which has not been urged in any of the Courts below. But a new point can be agitated as an alternative case provided it proceeds on admitted or proved facts. (Mukerji and Bennet, JJ.) DILA RAM v. KURA MAL. I.R. 1931 All. 833 = 134 I C. 449 = A.I.R. 1932 A. 289.

———Appeal—New plea—Correctness of entries in settlement records.

———Appeal—New plea—Court if precluded from entertaining—Plea of estoppel.

Per Sulaiman, A.J.C.—It is doubtful if the Full Bench case of Ram Kinka Rai v. Tufani Mir, 1930 A. L.J. 1601, intended to lay down or could have laid down an exhaustive list of all possible cases in which alone a new point can be allowed to be raised in first or second appeal or in letters Patent appeal. There is however nothing to suggest that although a party cannot claim permission to raise a new point of law, the Court itself is precluded from deciding the case on such a new point. Plea of estoppel allowed to be raised. (Sulaiman, A.C.J., Boys and Banerji, JJ.) MAHABIR SINGH v. NARAIN TEWARI. 54 A. 25 = I.R. 1931 All. 812 = 134 I.C. 236 = 1931 A.L J. 715 = A.I.R. 1931 All. 490 (F.B.).

———Appeal—New plea—Different titles.

Where the ptaintiff in both the lower Courts fought out his case on the basis of his title as donee but in appeal fought to raise his title as heir.

Held, that the latter plea could not be allowed to be raised. (Srivastava, J.) JHUMAN v. HUSSAIN. I.R. 1931 Oudh 81 = 129 I.C. 161 = 7 O.W.N. 1058 = A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 7.

———Appeal—New plea—Direction to jurisdiction.

An objection as to jurisdiction cannot be raised for the first time in second appeal. (Oakden, S.M. and Keane, J.M.) SYED MAHOMED MEHDI v. RAM DEI. 15 R D. 158 = 12 L.R. 31 (Rev.).

———Appeal—New plea—Framing of fresh issue and remand.

Where a new plea would necessitate a remand, the framing of a fresh issue and a trial of a totally new point, it could not be allowed at the appellate stage. (Broadway and Abdul Qadir, JJ.) PRITAM SINGH v. SUNDAR SINGH. 6 R.L. 508 = 148 I.C. 171 = A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 34 (2).

PRACTICE—Appeal.

———Appeal—New plea—Fraud.

Where no case of fraud has been set up in the pleadings nor has an amendment been asked for at any stage, the appellate Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the plea of fraud. (Virman Bose, A.J.C.) MAKHANLAL v. PANCHAMLAL. 152 I.C. 398 = 7 R.N. 101 = 18 N.L. J. 27 = A I.R. 1934 Nag. 226.

———Appeal—New plea—Interference in second appeal.

An appellate Court will not be justified in decreeing a claim on a footing wholly unwarranted by the pleadings of the parties Thus a plea of joint family status not definitely raised in the plaint cannot be entertained for the time in appeal. Where such a plea was entertained the High Court interfered in second appeal. (Sen and Naimatullah, JJ.) GAURI SHANKAR SHARMA v. THAKUR MEWA RAM. I.R. 1931 All. 369 = 131 I.C. 513 = A.I.R. 1931 All. 600.

———Appeal—New plea—Limitation.

It is open to a party to reagitate a plea of limitation in second appeal on the admitted fact even though he did not press it in the lower appellate Court. (Pullan and Naimatullah, JJ.) RAM CHARITTER MISIR v. SURAJ TELI. 53 A. 738 = 136 I.C. 71 = I.R. 1932 A. 119 = 1931 A.L.J. 997 = A.I.R. 1932 A. 108.

———Appeal—New plea—Limitation.

Even though the applicability of a particular article of Limitation Act may not be raised in either of the lower Courts by the plaintiff, it can be raised for the first time in second appeal provided the defendants are not prejudiced by the fact that the question of applicability was not raised earlier. (Jack and Remfrey, JJ.) HARI CHARAN BHUNYA v. SM. KAMAL KUMARI DASI. I R. 1931 Cal. 604 = 132 I.C. 684 = 35 C.W. N. 307 = A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 670.

———Appeal—New plea—Limitation—Question of law.

Where a plea of special limitation is raised for the first time in appeal the High Court can enter into the question in so far as it raises a point of law. (Kulwant Sahay and Macpherson, JJ.) JURAWAN SINGH v. RAMSAREKH SINGH. 12 Pat. 261 = 149 I.C. 561 = 6 R.P. 620 (2) = 14 Pat.L.T. 113 = A.I R. 1933 Pat. 224.

———Appeal—New plea—Maintainability.

The appellate Court will not interfere with the finding of the trial Court on a plea not raised in the trial Court regarding which there is no cogent evidence. (Drake Brockman, S. M. and Holmes, J.M.) HARAK CHAND v. BHAGIRATHI. 15 L.R. 21 (Rev.).

———Appeal—New plea—Maintenance—Claim for—Plea of waiver.

Where a person entitled to claim maintenance from a particular date makes a demand for it only at a later date, it does not mean that her right to maintenance for the period anterior to the demand is lost, in the absence of proof of waiver. The question of waiver depends on facts, and when it is not pleaded or put in issue in the lower Court, it cannot be raised for the first time in appeal. ———Appeal—New plea—Objection for being impleaded not raised in trial Court.

Where the respondents did not raise any objection to their being joined as defendants in the trial Court, but submitted to the jurisdiction of that Court, Held, they ought not to have been allowed to raise this objection for the first time on appeal. (Dunkley, J.) DAW AYE MYA v. U KWE NYO. 154 I.C. 465=7 R.N. 307=A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 23.

———Appeal—New plea—Plea of adverse possession.

A plea of adverse possession is a mixed question of law and fact, and if the plaintiff wants to base his title on it he should specifically advance this plea in the first Court, when an issue would be framed and finding given. Where no such issue is framed by the trial Court and no evidence is given, the plea of adverse possession cannot be entertained in appeal. of appeal cannot be raised by the appellate Court when such a plea requires investigation into the facts. The dismissal by the appellate Court of the suit on such a plea is neither proper nor justified. An appellate Court has no business to make new case for a defendant. ———Appeal—New plea—Question of jurisdiction.

The objection that the civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit but must be brought in the revenue Court can be entertained in second appeal as the point goes to the root of the matter and is one of jurisdiction and as an appeal would lie to the commissioner if a suit were filed in the Revenue Court. Held, that if the District Judge considered that the plaint did not expressly profess to attack the alienations on the ground of incompetency of the so called alienors, then he should have allowed an amendment of the plaint and remanded the suit for re-trial as he had found that the defendants had been taken unawares as to the nature of the suit as found by the trial Judge, specially in view of the fact that the trial Judge understood the suit to be of that description and the plaintiff asserted it to be such. On appeal the whole case is before the appellate Court and it is within its powers to examine the legality as well as the propriety of all orders passed in the course of the trial including those relating to service of the defendants, passed by the trial Court. The appellate Court will, of course, be slow to interfere in matters which were within the discretion of the trial Courts, but there is no provision of law which bars its jurisdiction to consider them. In a matter like this, it is not possible to lay down any hard and fast rule as to when and under what circumstances the appellate Court ought to interfere. ———Costs—Bill of costs—Taxation—Application made six years after disposal of suit—Delay due to gross negligence of party and Counsel—If can be excused.

The right to recover costs in a proceeding was reserved till after the final disposal of the suit and the bill of costs was not presented within three months, as required by rules, of the disposal of the suit in appeal. The application for taxing of costs was made after six years of the appellate decree, the disgraceful delay being caused principally due to gross negligence on the party of the party to whom costs were awarded, and to that of his Counsel in not getting the costs taxed within a reasonable period.

Held, the rule fixing three months' time for carrying in a bill of costs for taxation is a rule of practice which ought to be enforced. To excuse a departure from the rule in such circumstances as appear in the present case would be to put a premium on gross negligence and delay. To allow Counsel's negligence as an excuse where a client has been content to sit down for six years under his lawyer's deception would be an altogether unreasonable indulgence. Held, that there was nothing to prevent a defendant in a mofussil Court from raising a defence of the nature of a counter claim; that the defendant did not want to support his title as he was admittedly the owner of the property; that his plea only amounted to saying that he could not be driven out of possession of the property as he had a better title than the plaintiff, the claim made by the plaintiff being under an instrument which was voidable and which was obtained from him by undue influence and misrepresentation; and that consequently the defendant was not precluded from raising the said plea. ———Duty of Court—Application of correct law—Omission to indicate in plaint basis of relief—If fatal.

The duty of the parties is to state facts in their pleadings and it is for the Court to apply the law. No doubt it is desirable that the basis on which the plaintiff relies for his relief be indicated in the plaint, but if all the facts are stated, the suit cannot fail for its omission. Certain property belonging to H devolved on his death on his son K. On the death of K, his mother came in possession of the property and held it as a life-tenant. She alienated part of the properties and a suit was brought by K's sister's son who was the reversioner questioning the alienation of the life estate holder. The claim was based as being the maternal grandson of H instead of as heir of K being his sister's son. The plaint however definitely stated that the property belonged to H and on his death devolved upon K and was in possession of K's mother as a life-estate holder. It also stated the relationship of plaintiff with H, namely, that he was his maternal grandson.

Held, that it clearly followed that the plaintiff was K's sister's son and it is the duty of parties to state facts in their pleadings and it is for the Court to apply the correct law and decide whether or not the plaintiff is the heir of K. ———Duty of Court—Litigant deliberately concealing material information.

Where a party institutes a suit for the recovery of money due upon the basis of a promissory note he must produce that promissory note or give a satisfactory explanation as to why he is unable to produce it, and in the absence of such explanation he is not entitled to rely upon a relative and ancillary document such as a receipt which formed part of the same document upon which both the promissory note and the receipt were inscribed. ———Duty of Court—Misquoting of provision of law—If material—Court to award suitable relief.

The proper duty of a party coming to the Court for relief is to set forth the facts and ask for the remedy which he desires. It is quite immaterial whether in the course of the argument he states that he relies on a particular rule or enactment to give him the remedy, and it is meaningless to state that the application he makes is made "under such and such rule." The mere fact that his application is headed with the number and name of a particular statute or rule is entirely immaterial. It is the duty of the Court to proceed to consult the law and find out if it has power in the circumstances to award the relief or any suitable relief which the applicant may have asked for. The constant use of the words in making an application "under such and such a rule" is much to be deprecated and leads to a great deal of misunderstanding. (Per *Courtney-Terrell, C. ———Duty of Court—Motives of litigant.

The motive of a person for having recourse to the law is irrelevant and immaterial. A Court has no concern with the motives of a litigant howsoever malicious they may be. ———Duty of Court—Notice of receipt of record after remand—No obligation on Court.

There is no obligation on the trial Court to notify to the parties or their pleaders about the receipt of records on remand of the case by the Court of appeal. Held, (i) that it was the duty of the party to enquire —and not that of the Court to notify—about the receipt of the records, that the failure of the Court so to notify was no excuse for the default to pay in time; (ii) that on default of the party, the suit stood automatically dismissed by virtue of the order of the appellate Court and the trial Court had no jurisdiction to proceed with the case; (iii) that the dismissal was not affected by the fact that the defendant subsequently took the money out of Court and returned it before the hearing. If a Judge should, however, take it entirely on himself to examine a document and form an opinion as to its genuineness in the privacy of his chamber, he puts the party against whom he decides at a considerable disadvantage, as he is deprived of his right of cross-examination. PRACTICE—Justice, equity & good conscience.

———Justice, equity and good conscience—Meaning.

Courts in India are enjoined to apply the rule of equity, justice and good conscience where there is no rule of law applicable to the facts but that is far from saying or meaning that each Judge may decide a case as he thinks fit and bound by no rules, but they must be rules and the decision of the case cannot depend upon caprice. Often the rules of justice, equity and good conscience means a rule of the common law of England or rules of equity, not as binding on Indian Courts but as a guidance in determining matters which come before them in which there is no rule of Indian Law. ———Justice, equity and good conscience—Rule of—Applicability—Interest—Award of—Principles.

Under the Mysore High Court Regulation and the Civil Courts Regulation, Courts in the Mysore State must, when there is no specific enactment or rule, act according to justice, equity and good conscience, and that means, that rules of English law so far as they are applicable to Indian society and Indian circumstances can be taken to be a proper guide. But Courts in Mysore are not bound to follow the old rules of English law which are being abrogated in England, because they are now considered antiquated, unjust or defective. Interest can therefore be awarded on unpaid debts, whether arising from contract or otherwise, unfettered by the restrictions imposed by Lord Tenterden's Act in England or the Indian Interest Act in British India. Court acceded to it and there was no objection raised by the defendants. A decree was passed accordingly leaving the question of damages and loss to be determined by a petition. PRACTICE—Second appeal.

———Second appeal—Inconsistent pleas—Suit for ground-rent—Assertion of proprietary title by defendants—Plea negatived—Subsequent claim of irrevocable license in second appeal—Permissibility.

In a suit by the plaintiff claiming as lessee from Cantonment Authorities for ground-rent, the defendants claimed that they were in occupation for over 100 years as a matter of right without any liability to pay rent. That plea of proprietary title was found against. The lower Court found that the defendants were licensees who were allowed to build their houses with the consent of the Cantonment Authorities.

Held, in second appeal, they were not entitled to relief on those findings on the basis of an irrevocable license which was contrary to their pleadings in which they had only claimed proprietary title by adverse possession. As a general rule the Court of appeal in considering the correctness of the judgment of the Court below will confine itself to the state of the case at the time such judgment was rendered and will not take notice of any facts which may have arisen subsequently but the Court will in exceptional cases depart from this rule and take notice of subsequent events on the principle that it is the duty of the Court which still retains control over the judgment to take such action as will shorten litigation, and preserve the rights of the parties. 11 C.W.N. 732, Foll. ———Subsequent events — Appellate Court — If can take notice of subsequent events—Right to give retrospective effect to legislation passed after decree of trial Court—Interference with rights of parties.

Appellate Courts do take and are entitled to take into account changes of circumstances which occur between the date of the decree of the lower Courts and the date of hearing of the appeal, and will, if necessary, give retrospective effect to legislation, even, if by so doing, they are obliged to interfere with the rights given to parties by decrees. A Court of appeal is not merely a Court of error, and when a change of circumstances or of law has taken place between the date of the decree under appeal and the hearing of the appeal, it is entitled to take such change into consideration and pass orders accordingly. PRACTICE—Subsequent events.

The terms of a kanom permitted the jenmi to re-enter on the breach of certain conditions imposed on the kanomdar, or without such breach after six years, the full terms being 12. The first Court held that there had been a breach of two conditions and decreed forfeiture refusing to relieve against it. The district Judge did not consider whether there had been a breach entailing forfeiture, but held that the six years term, having expired at the date of the appeal, the jenmi was entitled to re-enter without proving a breach of the conditions.

Held, the order of the appellate Judge was correct, as a Court is entitled to take into consideration events subsequent to date of plaint, provided this could be done without prejudice to the parties. (Butler, J.) JANAKI v. KALLIANI AMMA. 152 I.C. 643=7 R.M. 261=A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 675.

———Subsequent events—If to be considered.

A Court may, in suitable cases, take into consideration facts which come into existence during the pendency of the litigation, in order to avoid multiplicity of suits, although, as a general rule, the decision of a case must be based on the state of facts as they existed at the time the suit was instituted. A new cause of action can only be introduced, if at all, by an amendment of the pleadings; in which case the defendant must be allowed an opportunity to raise appropriate defences to it. These formalities can only be dispensed with in cases where no complications arise and where there is no fear of causing injustice to the opposite party. (*Srivastava, Ag. C. ———Subsequent events—Power of Courts to grant relief on basis of.

The Court is entitled to give relief to the parties with due regard to incidents that may have happened after the institution of the suit or even after its decision, if this course is desirable or essential in the interest of justice. A suit for house rent was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff was not entitled to rent since the house was sold in execution proceedings against him; the plaintiff went in revision and the sale was subsequently set aside.

Held, that the sale having been set aside, in order to prevent a multiplicity of suits, it was desirable to take notice of events that happened after the suit was dismissed and which revived the undoubted right of the plaintiff to recover the rent from the defendant. PRACTICE—Subsequent events.

The happening of a subsequent event should be taken notice of by the Courts only in suitable cases where this would not lead to further complications. A suit cannot be decreed on a cause of action which arises subsequent to the filing of the suit. When the plaintiff has no cause of action on the date of filing the suit, the accrual of the cause of action subsequently cannot enlarge the right of the plaintiff so as to enable him to maintain the suit which is premature. ———Subsequent events—Powers of Court to take note of.

Where in a suit brought by a de facto shebait to set aside certain alienations, his competency to bring the suit was questioned, the Court can take into account the circumstance that during the pendency of the suit the plaintiff had become the de jure shebait and permit him to maintain the suit. ———Subsequent events—Suit based on oral release—Oral release found against—Release in writing obtained in the course of the suit—Admissibility.

In certain cases Courts have given permission to parties to cure formal defects in their alleged title and even to put forward new grounds of title but whether such permission should be granted or not would depend on the special circumstances of each case. The plaintiff brought a suit for the possession of a religious office, basing his title on an oral release in his favour by the person preferentially entitled to the office. Subsequently in the course of the suit, he obtained from the same person a registered release-deed but the plaintiff did not put in any additional statement mentioning the release-deed. The oral release relied on in the plaint was found against by the Court and thereupon the plaintiff sought to prove the registered release deed. It was held that he cannot be permitted to rely upon it as it was obtained after the suit was filed. ———Action for money had and received—Scope and essentials of.

An action for money had and received—an equitable action—is in truth an action which is derived from the old action for debt. It is one of the actions on the case and for it to lie there must be circumstances which raise an express or implied contract to pay or what has been described as a fictitious contract to pay, i.e., the circumstances must be such that by the fiction of a contract, the law will impose the obligation to pay an imaginary debt. Moneys paid under an agreement ultra vires cannot be recovered back by an action for money had and received, because an ultra vires contract is null and void, and the basis for an action of the sort does not exist in such a case. ———Agra Pre-emption Act, S 16—'Entitled to pre-empt'—Meaning—Rights of pre-emption under Mahomedan Law and under Act—Right not exercisable under Mahomedan Law—Claim under Act can be proceeded with.

S. 16 does not contemplate the exercise of a right in areas to which the Act is expressly made not applicable. The expression "entitled to pre-empt" in the section does not include the right to pre empt which the plaintiff may possess in areas to which the Act is not applicable. Where certain shares of Zemindari property in a

Held, that the suit need not be dismissed in its entirety and the claim under the Act could be proceeded with. (Sulaiman and Young, JJ.) AMJAD ALI KHAN v. SAADAT BEGAM. 53 All. 524=132 I C. 193=1931 A.L.J. 269=A.I.R. 1931 All. 317.

———Agra Pre emption Act, S. 19, proviso (added by Act IX of 1929)—Applicability—Vendee obtaining voluntary transfer of property after institution of suit.

Under S 19, the crucial date is the date of the decree and any rule or change in the law that came into existence before that date would govern the suit. And hence pending a pre emption suit, a vendee cannot defeat the plaintiff's right, such as it had existed on the date of suit, by obtaining a voluntary transfer of the property in his own favour. Where the property vests in the receiver and he effects the sale of the land in dispute with consent of the insolvent who was a member of an agricultural tribe, and the consideration for the sale is paid to the receiver by the vendee, whereupon possession of the land is delivered to him, it is the receiver who is the vendor of the land in dispute and not the insolvent. ———Circumvention of—Sale or perpetual lease—Nature of transaction.

It is open to a person to circumvent the law of pre-emption be cloaking a transaction into which he enters in such a way that transaction cannot legally be held to be an out and out sale. In trying to achieve this object all devices are permissible but, at the same time, it is open to the Court to scrutinise all such devices very closely and to see if the transaction into which the parties have entered does really amount to a sale or not. If it does not amount to a sale in law then the device succeeds and the right of pre-emption is defeated. If on the other hand, it does amount to a sale, the device fails and the right of pre-emption is not circumvented. A transaction was cloaked as a perpetual lease for which ostensible rent was reserved to the lessor. No right of re-entry was reserved to the executant and the lessor divested himself of all rights and gave his lessee the right to transfer, sell, mortgage or gift away the plots ostensibly leased to him.

Held, that though the words "malikana" and Nazrana were used, they were mere devices and that the transaction was an out and out sale. (Case law discussed.) Pending an appeal from a decree in a pre-emption suit, the vendees-defendants acquired the properties sought to be pre-empted by means of exchange and contended that they had become co sharers with the plaintiff.

Held, that the claim for pre-emption could be resisted even though there might be a remote possibility of a suit being instituted later on by the minor members of the vendees family, for the cancellation of the transfer of the family properties made by the vendees in favour of the exchangers, as the vendees had acquired the properties from persons having full power to transfer the same. The actual acquisition by a pre-emptor is made not at the time when the property is sold to another, nor at the time when the suit is instituted but at the time when the decree is made. The preferential right that a person possesses at the time of the sale and retains till the institution of the suit merely entitles him to move the Court in his favour, but in order to succeed he must retain this position up to the time of obtaining the decree Hence where a pre-emptor files a suit for pre-emption on ground of his preferential right over the vendee, but the vendee pending suit gets his defect removed and clothes himself with equal right as that of the pre-emptor, the pre emptor has no preferential right at time of passing of decree and as such cannot succeed. ———Nature of right.

Pre-emption is primarily a right of substitution, and, if an agreement of sale has really taken place and a price has been fixed, the person entitled to pre-emption can claim the benefit of that agreement and can enjoy all conditions of the agreement including the price. It is only where the price has not been fixed in good faith that the Court should go into the matter and determine the market value or fair consideration, the reason being that the price is usually not fixed in good faith so as to Pre-emption of part of property.

———Pre-emption of part of property—If allowed—Pre emption only of whole bargain—No right to pick and choose.

The only limitation to this rule is that, in cases where land belonging to the pre-emptor has been included in the sale, he can exclude that portion and seek pre emption for the remainder, generally at a proportionate price. Hence where lands belonging to the vendor, to third parties, and to the pre-emptor have all been included in a sale by the vendor, the would-be pre-emptor must follow the general rule, that pre emption must include the whole transaction except that he may exclude his own lands; this exception being based on the impossible position that the pre-emptor would be forced to pre empt tne whole. 5 All. 382, Ref.; 102 P.R. 1894, Not foll. ———Pre emption of part of property—Rule against—Sale deed in favour of two vendees—Share of each vendee specified but not amount contributed by each.

The right of pre emption is not a right of re-purchase either from the vendor or the vendee, but is one of substitution for the vendee in the original sale. Therefore a plaintiff suing to pre empt a sale which had been effected by one sale-deed in favour of two vendees jointly, he is bound to take over the bargain in its entirety. He cannot sue against one of the joint purchasers only and claim possession of a fraction of the property sold on payment of the proportionate share of the purchase price. For the purposes of pre-emption, a sale transaction is regarded as indivisible in those cases, where the purchase money is paid in one lump sum without any specification of the amount paid by the various vendees, and the mere fact that the shares to be taken by the vendees respectively are specified in the sale-deed does not alter the nature of the transaction, it being at most an arrangement among the purchasers inter se, which does not affect the vendor. But as long as there is nothing to show that a consideration in cash has passed for the land, which is the sine qua non for making a transaction sale, an exchange of plots of land would be deemed an exchange and would not be liable to pre-emption. While it is not forbidden to a person to circumvent the law of pre-emption by taking a transfer which fails short of sale there is a marked distinction between a devise and a disguise. Where the parties have really entered into a sale transaction but have disguised it under the cloak or mask of a different transaction the Court must look to the real nature of the transaction for the purpose of determining whether it would be subject to the right of pre-emption or not. Where there is no other evidence of the intention of the parties other than the document itself the question resolves itself into one of construction pure and simple. But if evidence is forthcoming to show the real nature of the transaction it cannot be ignored. Transaction in case held to be one of sale for purposes of pre-emption. A land transferred to vendee was worth Rs. 300. The plaintiff sued on the allegation that the transaction was in effect a sale and not an exchange as described in the deed and that as he was a collateral of the vendor he was entitled to a decree for possession by pre-emption.

In execution of a small cause decree, the appellant attached the stock-in-trade of the judgment debtor. The respondent then put in a claim to the attached property under R. 102 of the Rules of Practice (Calcutta) which provides that the matter should be treated as a suit. In the claim, he valued the property at Rs. 4,000 and the property was released from attachment on the undertaking of the respondent to pay the decretal sum if his claim failed. And the claim failed, the respondent thereupon brought the present suit in the High Court alleging that the stock-in-trade of the judgment debtor had been hypothecated to him and praying for the enforcement of his charge. In that suit, he impleaded the appellant.

Held, that the appellant had no concern with or interest in the property from the moment when it was released from attachment on the undertaking of the respondent, whether the claim case failed or succeeded and that the liability of the respondent was by his undertaking conditional upon the result of the claim case and nothing else and so the suit was not maintainable as against the appellant. But the Court is bound in some measure to observe the ordinary principles as to framing suits laid down by the C. P. ———S. 7—Dispute between Official Assignee and third parties—Jurisdiction of Court to decide.

The Insolvency Court has jurisdiction under S. 7 of the Act to decide disputes falling within the purview of the section between the Official Assignee and third parties even though the Official Assignee does not claim a higher and better title. The proviso to the section is not intended to limit the scope of the section to matters in which the Official Assignee claims a higher title than the insolvent would himself have had but is intended only to prevent a stranger to the insolvency from being first examined under S. 36 and then to have his deposition taken under that section used against him on an application made under S. 7. Whether in any particular case an Insolvency Court in India should refuse to exercise its jurisdiction must necessarily depend upon the facts of each case and no hard and fast rule can be laid down in that behalf. Where the property was situate within the jurisdiction of the Court, the parties resided there, a regular suit if filed would be in that very Court and proceedings were already very old, held, that it was a fit case in which the Court should not decline to exercise its powers under S. 7. Where, in an application under S. 7, the Official Assignee does not claim a higher or a better title than the insolvent, the question whether the Insolvency Court should exercise its jurisdiction under the section or should refuse to do so and refer the Official Assignee to a regular suit must depend upon the facts of each case and no hard and fast rule can be laid down in that behalf. The proceedings started on an application under S. 7 were already three years old and the property in dispute was situate and the parties resided within the jurisdiction of the Court to which the application was made under S. 7. No prejudice was going to be caused to the party against whom the action was taken if he was required to defend his title to the property in such proceedings instead of in a regular suit.

The transfer by a debtor of the whole or substantially the whole of his property in consideration of a past debt is an act of bankruptcy under the English law as well as under S. 9 (b) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. But a transfer made in pursuance of an antecedent bona fide agreement that security should be given for a loan may not amount to a fraudulent transfer or fraudulent preference, it being incumbent on the person setting up the prior agreement to prove not only that the agreement did exist in fact, but also that it was in all respects a bona fide agreement. There must be no secret or expressed bargain or understanding that the giving of the security should be delayed until the debtor had reached a state of insolvency, for that would bring the transfer within this section. ———S. 9 (c)—Transfer by debtor of whole of his property—Act of insolvency—Whether the transaction amounts to.

It would not be safe to infer that every transfer of the whole of a debtors properyt is of necessity fraudulent. The sale however will constitute an act of insolvency if the seller intends to defeat or delay his creditors. Whether he does or does not in fact entertain such an intention is a matter of fact which is not the subject of any immutable presumption of law; it must be inferred from the circumstances of each particular case. Where a party unsuccessful in a case before the High Court has appealed to the Privy Council and pending the appeal, the successful party attached the debtor's properties and on the expiry of twenty-one days without satisfaction, applied to adjudicate the debtor.

Held, that the Court was not bound to adjudicate the debtor in spite of the default under S. 9 (e) but having regard to the fact that the debt was disputed and that there was a bona fide appeal pending, the proper procedure was to stay the petition generally with liberty to apply, provided proper security was given by the debtor. Where a member of a joint family firm instituted a suit for partition and managing members were themselves appointed receivers and they sent a circular to the creditors that they were not in a position to pay the debts, the whole proceedings from the institution of the partition suit constitute an act of insolvency. The firm should be deemed to carry on business so long as the business debts remain undischarged in spite of the institution of the suit and in sending the intimation to the creditors in pursuance of the wishes of the partners, the receivers were only acting as the agents of the firm. 48 M. 795, Foll. A notice to some of the creditors is sufficient to all the world if it is a real notice. ———S. 9 (g)—Suspension of payment—Dishonouring of cheque.

The dishonouring of cheques upon perfectly solvent current accounts is a suspension of payment. A suspension of payment can obviously be either a permanent suspension or a temporary suspension. Whatever reasons may be advanced as to the cause of suspension, even when those reasons may be advanced as to the cause of a suspension, and even when those reasons allege that payment will, in all probability, be renewed at some future date, such action on the part of a bank or a firm taking deposits must amount to a suspension. ———S. 9 (g)—Suspension of payment—Notice of—Statement amounting to—Act of insolvency—Strict proof.

The proof of the commission of an act of insolvency must be strict and precise, and where it is alleged that a debtor has given notice that he has suspended or is about to suspend payment of his debts, the time, place and particulars of the notice should be accurately specified, and it is incumbent upon the Court to scrutinize with meticulous care the evidence which is led in support of an act of insolvency. In order that a notice of suspension may amount to an act of insolvency, it should have been made within three months before the presentation of petition and it must amount to a deliberate and intentional notice on behalf of the debtor that he has suspended or is about to suspend payment of his debts to his creditors generally. Unless the statement itself is capable per se of conveying the intention that the debtor has suspended or intends to suspend or is about to suspend payment of his debts, it is unnecessary to consider the surrounding circumstances. ———S. 9 (g)—Suspension of payment—Notice of—Statement amounting to—Act of insolvency—Strict proof.

The proof of the commission of an act of insolvency must be strict and precise and where it is alleged that a debtor has given notice that he has suspended or is about to suspend payment of his debts, the time, place and particulars of the notice should be accurately specified and the allegation in the petition cannot be supplemented by allegations in the verifying affidavit, Where the petition stated that the debtors had given notice to the petitioners as well as to their other creditors that they have suspended or were about to suspend payment of their debts,

Held, that the act of insolvency was not in the form required by law, and was not couched in terms sufficiently clear and precise to be the basis of an insolvency petition or to justify the Court in passing an order of adjudication. PRESY. TOWNS INS. ACT (1909), S. 9.

A statement by a debtor that he is not in a position to pay in full to his creditors may or may not amount to a notice that the debtor has suspended or was about to suspend payment of his debts within S. 9 (g). It depends on the circumstances in which the statement is made. Where the debtor made such a statement and his intention was to try to arrange with his more pressing creditors and to put off the evil day,

Held, that he had not suspended nor was he about to suspend payment of his debt. (Page, C.J. and Mya Bu, J.) C. A. P. C. S. CHETTYAR v. V. V. R. CHETTYAR. 13 Rang. 686 =159 I.C. 1055=8 R.R. 314=A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 352.

———S. 9 (g)—Suspension of payment—What amounts to.

When a banking firm closes its doors and gives notice to its creditors that it is not going to make any further payments to its customers, this can be said to amount to an act of insolvency amounting to suspension of payment. But where a banker tells his customers, "I am unable to meet your demands owing to the peculiar circumstances, viz., that you are all demanding instant payment of your dues; but give me time to satisfy you that I am perfectly solvent," that cannot amount to a suspension of payment. ———S. 9, Explanation—Act of insolvency—Conduct of agent—Adjudication of principal—Procedure.

The mere fact of a person being an agent of a Chettyar firm cannot in law entitle him to allow a creditor to obtain an order of adjudication, because he, the agent, purports to commit an act of insolvency within the meaning of S. 9. It is incumbent on the Court to require proof from the adjudicating creditor that the agent who is alleged to have committed the act of insolvency was expressly or impliedly authorised to do so or that the ordinary course of the business that he carried on for his principal, or that the nature of such business was sufficient to justify the Court holding that the agent's acts should be considered, in the circumstances, to be the acts of his principal. ———S. 10—Acts of insolvency—Need for particulars—Vague allegations—Adjudication refused.

The petition alleged three acts of insolvency; one was a verbal notice of suspension of payment of debts on a date not given; the second was "keeping house" and concealing himself to avoid meeting his creditors and for that too, no date was given; the last was that he had disposed of a considerable portion of his properties and was trying to dispose of the rest.

Held, that the acts alleged were not sufficient to support an order of adjudication.

———S. 11—Jurisdiction—Petition by creditor—Allegation that debtor is carrying on business within jurisdiction—Non-proof of—Debtor found to personally work for gain within jurisdiction—If sufficient.

It was alleged in a petition by a creditor that the debtor carried on business within the jurisdiction of Court, but that allegation was not proved. It was, however, admitted and found that the debtor worked for gain at the said place at the material times and also resided within jurisdiction.

Held, that defect in the pleadings and the variation between the allegations in the pleading and proof were not fatal, and that the Court could disregard the erroneous allegation made in the petition and that it was sufficient, for the Court to assume jurisdiction, that the debtor resided and worked for gain within the jurisdiction. (Remfry, J.) L. E. SALCICIONI, In re. 164 I.C. 627=9 R.C. 257=39 C.W.N. 324.

———S. 11 (b)—Business by commission agents—Jurisdiction.

The business contemplated by Cl. (b), S. 11, is business carried on within the limits of the Court by a debtor either personally or through an agent properly and strictly so called, and under his effective control, but not by a general agent who carries on business in his own name for diverse constituents on payment to him of a commission. A.I.R. 1929 Sind 24, Rel. on. Where therefore the business carried on at Karachi was a business not of a firm out of British India but of the commission agents who inter alia made transactions on behalf of the firm and all the transactions were invariably made by the commission agents in their own respective names and they were personally responsible to the local dealers, the mere fact that the firm out of British India employed the services of these agents to sell goods sent to them from up-country or to enter into forward contracts of sale and purchase on behalf of the firm, would not by itself be sufficient to give jurisdiction to the Karachi Court. ———S. 11 (b)—"Ordinarily resided"—Meaning of—Confinement in jail—If sufficient.

A debtor who is confined in the Rangoon Central Jail for upwards of 12 months prior to the date of the petition must be deemed to have "ordinarily resided" in Rangoon within the meaning of S. 11 (b) so as to give jurisdiction to the High Court to entertain the petition. ———S. 11 (c)—"Works for gain"—Engine driver occasionally going to Bombay—Jurisdiction of Bombay High Court.

The question whether the insolvent personally works for gain in a particular place is primarily a question of fact. A person may be working for gain in more than one place. The place where the payment is made to the insolvent is not the test but one of the factors for consideration. The more important thing is where the money is actually received by the debtor and so available for the creditors. There must also be some degree of permanency in the relation between the debtor and the places where he is alleged to work for gain.

An engine driver of the G. I. P. Ry. resided in Bhusawal, received his pay there and took his orders there. He occasionally went to Bombay; the pay-sheets of the railway servants were prepared at the head office of the railway at Bombay. Held, that the Court at Bombay had no jurisdiction to adjudicate the debtor as an insolvent. ———S. 11 (d)—Applicability—Application against firm of debtors and not an individual person—Test of jurisdiction.

Cl. (d) of S. 11 applies where the application is against a firm of debtors and not against an individual debtor. It is necessary in order to give the Court jurisdiction to pass an order of adjudication, that the firm of debtors carried on business within a year of the date of the application within the Court's jurisdiction. And the onus is on the applicant to prove the fact. 1929 Sind 24 and 14 Bom. 541, Ref. The question for determination in such a case however is not whether the debt of the petitioning creditor arose within the jurisdiction of the Court but whether the debtor firm carried on business within a year of the date of application within the jurisdiction of the Court. To give jurisdiction, the business should be carried on either personally or by an agent, properly and strictly so called, but not by a general agent, carrying on business, in his own name, for diverse constituents on commission. The debtor firm had a servant permanently employed within the jurisdiction of the Court who used to watch over the interests of his master, give directions for sale when instructed to do so, bring brokers to the general agent, check weighments, hand over railway receipts and see that the goods were sold at the best available price, make entries in his books and keep his master informed; and a partner of the firm used to come every few months for a few days in connexion with the business of the firm.

Held, that the debtor firm carried on business within the jurisdiction of the Court. (Case-law referred.) (Aston, A. J. C.) In re GOBINDRAM DHARAMDAS. 150 I.C. 453=7 R.S. 3= A.I.R. 1933 Sind 250.

———S. 12 (1) (c)—Petition of creditor—Amendment—Permissibility—Addition of act of insolvency committed more than three months back.

Where an application for amendment is filed more than three months after the alleged act of insolvency is committed, such an application is not within time under S. 12 (c) and so the effect of granting an amendment is to give the petitioning creditors rights which they would not have had, had they sought to file their petition on the date when they applied for the amendment. Hence the amendment should not be permitted in such circumstances. (O'Sullivan, A. J. C.) GOBINDRAM KEDARNATH v. PARMANAND DIWANCHAND 153 I C 822=7 R.S. 144=A.I.R. 1934 Sind 177.

———S. 13—'Ability to pay debts'—Meaning— Onus of proof.

The onus of proving that the debtor is able to pay the debts so that the creditor's petition may be dismissed is on the debtor himself. What the statute means by ability to pay debts is not merely that the man has assets, which if liquidation proceeds may in the result provide sufficient money to discharge his debts. It means that he is not so embarrassed that he cannot meet his debts in ordinary way by making legal tender and discharging his debts. The circumstance that a man has assets and the assets are not liquid assets and therefore he cannot pay his debts is a circumstance which stand in favour of having a liquidation and not against having a liquidation. ———S. 13—Partners—Separate adjudications on same debt—Validity.

The petitioning creditor had filed a suit against the son of the applicant individually and obtained a decree; but he afterwards learnt that the applicant was also a partner with his son and proceeded against him under the insolvency law on the same debt. In a notice of motion taken out by the applicant to set aside the adjudication order passed against him it was contended that an account of the decree obtained against his son as a partner there was no debt due and payable by him and that it was not competent to the petitioner to get him adjudicated.

PRESY. TOWNS INSOL. ACT (1909), S. 13.

Held, that though the remedy to sue may be barred by limitation, yet the debt was not extinguished. If therefore it was proved that the debt in dispute was a partnership debt its existence would suffice to support an adjudication order against both father and son. ———Ss. 17 and 25—Adjudication—If ipso facto protects insolvent against arrest.

Upon a proper construction of S. 17 and S. 25 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and the corresponding Ss. 23, 28 and 31 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, upon adjudication an insolvent not only has not ipso facto the protection of the law against execution upon his person, but must apply to the Insolvency Court to grant him in its discretion a protection order. Neither in S. 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, nor in S. 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act is any mention made of leave being necessary in respect of remedies against the person of the insolvent, both these sections referring not to the person but to the property of the insolvent. It is intended and enacted by the legislature that an order of adjudication should not operate automatically as a protection against execution upon the person of an insolvent, but that the insolvent should be compelled to apply to the Court to grant him the privilege of protection against arrest, which the Court would do only if the circumstances of the case justified it. ———S. 17—Partner—Adjudication of—Rights of Official Assignee—Assignment of debt due to partnership after adjudication of two of the partners—Validity.

The Official Assignee, as assignee of the insolvent partners, has a right to come in on a winding up of partnership and claim his share. His rights and liabilities are co-extensive with those of the insolvent partners, had not they become bankrupt; when, therefore, only a partner or some of the partners of the firm become insolvent, the Official Assignee becomes a tenant-in-common with the continuing partners from the date of the petition and the solvent partners have the right to realise the partnership properties. Consequently it must follow that the Official Assignee can claim nothing as to insolvent's shares until all the joint creditors of the partnership are paid. So an assignment of a mortgage debt due to the partnership of the firm is valid even though two of the partners had been adjudicated prior to the assignment. The rules of the Provident Fund of a Company provided that a member was entitled to receive the amount only on his retirement or discharge and that in case he transferred his interest during service he was liable to forfeit his rights for the amount to the Company. A member while in service was adjudged insolvent on his own petition and his rights vested in the Official Assignee.

Held, that the effect of his petition was to transfer or assign immediately his property to the Official Assignee and such transfer which is by operation of law was equivalent to a voluntary transfer by the debtor to the Official Assignee within the meaning of the Provident Fund rule. There would not be such transfer if the debtor were adjudicated otherwise than on his own petition, because transfer in such a case could hardly be deemed to be due to the voluntary act of the debtor, nor if there was collusion between the trustees administering the Fund and the debtor to defeat the claims of creditors. In the case of a mortgaged property the secured creditor has a right to deal with the mortgaged property without making any application to the Insolvency Court. The matter therefore of mortgage suits is one which lies apart from insolvency proceedings and although it might be possible for an Official Assignee to apply to the Court to be made a party in a mortgage suit it would be seldom that it would be in the interests of the estate for the Official Assignee to take such action. be prescribed. The Court has, therefore, first to prescribe the time within which the insolvent must apply for an order of discharge, and then to be satisfied that the application for discharge was not made within that time. It is only in that event that the Court has jurisdiction to make an order of annulment; and in exercising that jurisdiction, when it does arise, that Court has to consider, at the time of making an order of annulment, whether it ought to make an order under S. 23 of the Act. As to the vesting of property, unless this procedure is followed, the order of annulment will be an invalid order. When the Judge made an order in August, the jurisdiction to make which only arose in November and he did not consider at the time when the jurisdiction arose what order ought to be made,

Held, that the order of annulment was a wholly invalid order. The property of an insolvent divisible amongst the creditors under S. 52 (1) (a) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act comprises all such property as may be acquired by or devolve on the insolvent before his discharge. The Official Assignee can thus assert a right to such property acquired by the insolvent after his adjudication and before his discharge. But unless the Official Assignee intervenes, so as to assert under S. 52 a right to divide amongst the creditors of the insolvent property which has been so acquired by the insolvent, such after-acquired property may be dealt with by the insolvent himself and third parties may acquire it from the insolvent. What is required for constituting intervention must naturally take its colour from the nature of the property. When the property consists of a right of action and there is already a suit by the insolvent pending, the proper course is for the Official Assignee to apply to be made a plaintiff in the suit and to be given the conduct of the suit. Where the Official Assignee merely appears in Court at the instance of the Judge and asks the defendant's solicitor to consent to the Court Receiver handing over the assets to himself, but on the annulment of adjudication subsequently disclaims any interest in the subject-matter of the suit, there is no intervention by him at all so to prevent the insolvent from maintaining the suit. Where a judgment-debtor is a party to the execution proceedings and is apprised of the assignment of the decree by the original decree-holder who is adjudged insolvent, in favour of a private person, as well as of the application of the transferee to be substituted in place of the original decree-holder and to carry on the execution and he raises no objection at the time, the Official Assignee not taking any steps to take possession of the decree and execute it himself, he (judgment-debtor) cannot object to the execution and say that the Official Assignee alone is entitled to execute the decree. It is for the Official Assignee or the creditors of the insolvent to object to the money due under the decree being paid to the transferee of the original decree-holder, and therefore, S. 55 does not bar execution of the decree by a private transferee. The judgment-debtor cannot be permitted to frustrate the execution and to claim exemption from his liability to pay the decree upon the ground that the decree-holder has been adjudged insolvent. If the Official Assignee thinks that the transfer is good, there is no reason why the transferee should be debarred from executing the decree. In the absence of any evidence one way or the other, it is not open to the Court to hold that a transfer of a decree made by a person within two years prior to his adjudication was not in good faith and for valuable consideration, in direct conflict with the recitals in the deed of assignment and the circumstances set-forth therein. It is also not sufficient for the judgment-debtor to say that the transaction was colourable and collusive and that the decree had vested in the Official Assignee by operation of law. He has to show not only that the Official Assignee was entitled to intervene but also he had intervened, or that he intended to intervene. (*Jwala Prasad, A. C. In order that a deed of trust executed by a debtor for the benefit of creditors within two years prior to his adjudication may be valid, it is necessary that the transfer of property should be in favour of (1) a purchaser (2) in good faith and (3) for valuable consideration. The burden is on the trustees under the deed of trust to make out that the transfer satisfied all the three conditions. 43 M. 739; 39 M.L.J. 345, Ref. A debtor had nearly seventy creditors but only six of them were parties to the deed of trust. The others were not even consulted on the matter. The particular creditor who was alleged to have looked into the accounts of the debt was himself an undischarged insolvent and it was not shown he had anything to lose. One of the trustees appointed under the deed was the debtor himself and the evidence showed that the other creditors were lulled into inaction by a promise to pay in instalments, a promise which was kept up for three months only with a view to gain time and avoid the trust being made the basis of an application for adjudication. Under these circumstances, it was held that the deed of trust was not entered into in good faith for the benefit of creditors and that it should be set aside. The expression is wide enough to cover all sorts of devices that may be practised or suffered by the insolvent to deprive his creditors of the benefit of his property. A remission of a debt by the insolvent without consideration is as much a voluntary transfer under S. 55, in India as in England, and as such against the English Law Section 55 of the Act would override in an insolvency matter the provisions of S. 63 of the Contract Act. ———S. 56—Fraudulent preference—Test of—Pressure—Demand is no evidence of pressure when parties aware of impending collapse—No effect on the mind of the debtor.

The mere making of a preferential payment is not a fraudulent preference. The substantial motive of the debtor in making it must be looked at. If the substantial motive is to prefer the creditor, the payment is a fraudulent preference. If the substantial motive is reparation for past wrong, or to avoid evil consequences to the debtor himself, the payment is not a fraudulent preference. The word "preference" imports the voluntary act of a person who has a choice in the matter. In particular circumstances when a creditor makes a demand for payment, with or without a threat of launching legal proceedings to recover the debt, the effect of the demand upon the mind of the debtor is such that he is no longer to be regarded as making the payment voluntarily or exercising free will in the sense of electing to do something which he need not do. If a demand has that effect upon the mind of the debtor, a transfer executed in favour of a creditor in those circumstances is not a fraudulent preference under S. 56. On the other hand, a demand by the creditor is not always evidence of pressure. If a debtor thinks that if he accedes to the demand and pays his creditor he will be able to continue to carry on his business, and makes the transfer with that object in view, then the debtor's intention in making that transfer is not to prefer the creditor but to benefit himself and prevent his business from being brought to an end. E contra where (as in the present case) a demand for payment is made by a creditor to a debtor at a time when both of them have reason to apprehend that the financial position of the debtor is such that in all probability the debtor's business will collapse, the demand would not have any real effect on the mind of the debtor. There is no room in those circumstances for any "pressure" to operate and the transfers in favour of creditors should be treated as fraudulent preferences. Exp. Taylor, In re Goldsmith, 18 Q.B.D. 295 and Sharp v. Jackson, 1899 A.C.

———S. 104—Complaint under—Considerations —Notice to insolvent—Desirability.

In considering whether a complaint should be made under S. 104, the Court has not only to take into account the probability of the criminal proceedings being successful or the reverse, but also must determine upon a consideration of the case as a whole whether it is desirable in the public interest that an example should be made of an insolvent whose conduct has been so bad that criminal proceedings ought to be taken against him as deterrent against the same or similar offences being committed by other insolvents. In any case, the Judge is at liberty to proceed under S. 104 with or without a preliminary enquiry being made. Further, an application under S. 104 is not one in which the insolvent against whom proceedings are proposed is entitled to take part unless invited to do so by the Court, but it cannot be said that where an insolvent is not heard on an application under S. 104 the insolvent is not thereby prejudiced in any way, because in the event of proceedings by way of prosecution being instituted he has, of course, ample opportunity of appearing and defending himself in those proceedings when launched. It depends on the circumstances; and it may often be of great importance to the insolvent that he should have an opportunity of explaining to the Court the reasons why he contends that the Court should not proceed to the extreme limit of making a complaint under S. 104 against him in a Criminal Court. It not only authorizes one Court in the United Kingdom to aid and get aid from British Courts outside the United Kingdom but also enables two British Courts outside the United Kingdom to aid each other. So it authorizes one High Court in British India to aid another High Court in British India or a High Court in British India to help a provincial Insolvency Court in British India. S. 126 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act which provides that all Courts shall make such orders as may be necessary to give effect to S. 118 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, enables the High Court at Rangoon, by means of an order of Court together with a request, to call upon the Madras High Court and its officers to act in aid of it and of the Official Assignee of Rangoon in an insolvency. Certain shares of a Co-operative Bank were held by the insolvents, a trading firm. The Bank proved their claim without disclosing their lien or giving credit for the shares. On an application by the Official Assignee, it was contended by them that (i) under the provision of S. 26 of the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act (VII of 1925) the shares were exempt from attachment of sale or the claims of Official Assignee, that the provisions of the Insolvency law relating to proof by secured creditors applied only to property which vested in the Official Assignee; (ii) under bye-law 8 of the Bank, a member may be expelled and his shares forfeited on his insolvency.

Held, that (i) the shares which stood in the names of the insolvents were indubitably their property over which the insolvents had a disposing power, subject to the lien; (ii) on their insolvency, they had not been in fact expelled and the Bank had not forfeited their shares so far and bye-law 8 was of no avail; that if necessary, the value of the shares may be indirectly made available for the benefit of the creditors by making it a condition to the discharge of the insolvents that they should dispose of them and pay their value to the Official Assignee; therefore the Bank should be directed to value or relinquish their security. ———S. 4 (1) (a) [as amended by S. 16 (d) of Act XXIII of 1932]—Offence under—Disapprobation of certain Government acts—No attribution of base motive—No intention to excite disaffection—Offence.

An article in a newspaper contained the following passages. ". . . What underlies this arrangement is, in the (language of) modern political dictionary "reprisal". "The jail in India are not indeed heaven. The retaliatory measures of mediaeval sternness which exist are enough for the preservation of order and discipline."

Held, that the article, on a plain reading of it, was intended to support a protest against the measure adopted by the Government, that the word "reprisal" denotes an act of retaliation for some injury or attack, and that it was borrowed from International Law for describing the relations between the Government and the people; and that the use of the word "reprisal," cannot be taken to "tend to bring into hatred or contempt the Government established by law in British India," or "to excite disaffection" towards the Government, and as such do not fall under S. 4 (1) of the Press Act (1931), as amended by S. 16 of Act XXIII of 1932.

Held further, that the use of the word 'retaliatory' in the second passage was only intended to convey that the punishments provided by the jail Code were quite sufficient for subduing recalcitrant prisoners and for maintaining peace or orderliness, and that the writer was not ascribing any base motive to the Government, but only characterising the jail measures as harsh and retaliative. That the article read as a whole was not open to real objection; it only expressed disapprobation of certain measures of the Government with a view to getting them altered by lawful means without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection, and that it could not tend directly or indirectly to bring the Government into hatred or contempt. ———(As amended in 1932), S. 4 (1) (b) and Expl. 4—Article stating that "Chettiyars possess the same essential characteristics as the crow."

The article in question made reference to the alleged fact that Chettiyars possess the same essential characteristics as the crow, which appeared in the forefront of the article.

Held, that a crow is regarded as a rascal imbued with a low cunning that enables him to pilfer and take advantage of less wary creatures; and deliberately to ascribe in a Burmese newspaper the same attributes to the Chettiyars necessarily tended to engender ill feeling between the Burmans and Chettiyars.

Held also, that the article was outside the pale of Expl. 4 because the object with which it was published plainly was not to remove the sources of any ill feeling that might exist between the Chettiyars and Burmans, but to remove the Chettiyars themselves by making their residence in Burma unprofitable, if not intolerable. ———S. 4 (1) (c)—Newspaper article—Entire article to be taken—Reference to arrest of Editor —Offence.

The Court should in every case consider the book or newspaper article as a whole and in a fair, full and liberal spirit, not dwelling too much upon isolated passages or upon strong word here and there, which may be qualified by the context but endeavouring to gather the general effect which the whole composition would have on the minds of the public. The object of a certain paragraph in respect of which security was demanded under S. 4 was to advertise the newspaper and to secure the patronage of its readers. For that purpose it mentioned the improvements already carried out, held out a promise for future improvements and excused the delay in introducing all the improvements on the plea of the arrest of the Editor whose sufferings in the cause of the nation were claimed as a matter of pride.

Held, that the reference to the arrest of the Editor should not be divorced from the context and the paragraph as a whole was not obnoxious

Security cannot be demanded from a printer or a publisher, who has made his declaration prior to the date of the commencement of the Ordinance, unless the newspaper has been used, subsequent to that date, for the purpose of publishing an objectionable matter. A requisition for security proceeding on a writing published before that date is wholly illegal. The Editor of a newspaper had made a declaration before the date of the commencement of the Ordinance. The Local Government demanded a security from the Editor under S. 4 in respect of an issue published on the 29th April although it contained no offending matter. The order for demand of security proceeded upon what was published before the promulgation of the Ordinance. An article subsequently appeared in the same paper blaming Government for making full use of its extraordinary powers to make free and honest journalism almost impossible and illustrating the danger of the absuse of the powers under the Ordinance by referring to the demand of security from the Hindustan Times.

Certain articles published in the Indian Daily Mail alleged that the Ordinances were applied ruthlessly and not reasonably, excessive sentences were passed, the way in which particular individuals were picked out for punishment and the unanimity of the Magistrates in inflicting heavy sentences showed that the Magistrates were working in consultation and in co-operation with the Executive, the abuse of powers indicated a policy of vindictiveness, and that the Government should take steps against such abuse.

Held, (i) that the general tendency of the articles was not to criticise the policy of the Government of India in promulgating the Ordinances but to assert that the local Government were deliberately abusing and misusing the powers conferred on them by the Ordinances;

Words pointing out matters which are producing or have a tendency to produce feelings of enmity or hatred between different classes of His Majesty's subjects must often, if not invariably, tend either directly or indirectly to promote such feelings, yet if such words are published without malicious intention and with an honest view to the removal of such matters, they are not within the amended S. 4 (1) (h) by reason of the provisions of Explanation 4 to that section. Where in the leaflet the subject-matter of the charge, the condition of the kisans was described and certain proposals were made for alleviating and improving their position and status and it was contended for the prosecution that it was a document which tended to promote feelings of enmity between kisans on the one hand and zamindars or the Government on the other, and consequently its publication was an offence under S. 18 (1), Press Act.

Held, that although the words of the leaflet might tend to promote feelings of enmity or hatred between the kisans and the zamindars, the writer did nothing more than point out with a view to their removal the grivances of the kisans and had no malicious intent and that the leaflet fell precisely within the words of Explanation (4) and, that being so, it could not be held to be an unauthorised news-sheet within the meaning of S. 18 (1), Press Act, read with the other sections of that Act. For a subject nation to pray to Sri Krishna on a "Janmashtami" day for attainment of political freedom is not a thing which can be legitimately condemned. But for an innocent sentiment of such character expressions such as "uplifted hand of oppression," "oppressed and humiliated India," "India persecuted and under subjection" and "Piteous wail of a suffering people" will have no place and would be wholly inapposite. These expressions assume the presence of an agency which has oppressed and humiliated her, has uplifted its hand for oppressing her further, and has been persecuting her by keeping her under subjection and being heedless of the piteous wails of her suffering people. The only agency for which it is possible to behave in that way is the Government established by law, and the expressions, having been used with reference to it, obviously tend to bring it into hatred or contempt and are calculated to excite disaffection towards it. What has to be considered is the effect likely to be produced upon persons who may be expected to read the passages in question, and for that purpose not only ought the article to be read as a whole, but under S. 26 of the Act it is permissible for the Court to have regard to what is contained in other issues of the same publication with a view to ascertaining what would be the probable effect of the offending passages upon those persons who normally would see the articles that are published in the newspaper. He cannot be presumed to have in view the idea of causing any loss to the shop-keeper or interfering with the rights of the shop-keeper. ———Adathi—System, explained.

The course of business known as adathi system prevailing among Chettiar money-lenders in Burma is to the following effect. A Chettyar in the mofussil, who wishes to be certain that he will have at his disposal during the course of the year enough capital to meet the requirements of his business, employs a Chettyar in Rangoon as his adathi. The adathi undertakes to previde within a stated limit the capital necessary to meet the requirements of his mofussil constituent and for his services during the year the adathi is paid by his principal in the country a fixed sum by way of remuneration, which varies according to the amount of accommodation that the adathi undertakes to provide. For such accommodation as may be required by the principal within the limit set out in the adathi agreement, the usual current rate among Chettyars is charged; but if the mofussil constituent requires capital in excess of the limit for which the adathi undertakes to be responsible, on the additional sums that he provides the adathi is at liberty to charge interest in excess of the rates current among the Chettyars. When a mofussil Chettyar requires capital he instructs his adathi to procure the required sum for him and the adathi either provides the money out of his own resources or obtains it from one or other of the members of the Chettyar community in Rangoon. though it followed a proposed precedent unless between the parties it has been rectified or at least is such as would, by the Court be rectified. The question at issue was whether the acting Manager of the defendant Bank had the authority to certify cheques drawn by a constituent, as good for payment on a future day. The plaintiff sought to read the word "accept" into the power of attorney suggesting that it had been omitted owing to the copyist's mistake.

———Broker—Right to commission—Test of—Completion of transaction.

It is necessary in order to entitle a broker to earn his commission to show in the absence of a contract to the contrary, that the transaction is completed, or if the transaction is not completed, to show that the non-completion is due to the default of the principal. But the defendant cannot by employing another broker in the midst of negotiations, however innocently, deprive the broker who brought the parties together of his commission. If, however, the negotiations carried on by the broker have completely ceased and have been abandoned at the time his employment as a broker has ceased, the agency of the broker too ceases and with it his right to claim remuneration. ———'pakka arhatia'—Rights of—Custom entitling commission agent to protection from eventual loss—Validity.

In the case of transactions entered into on the Pakka arhat system a custom or usage that entitles the commission agent to protect himself from loss in the event of the failure of the contracting party to insure him against the loss is not either unreasonable or immoral. There is direct contractual relationship between the pakka arhatia and the purchaser and the seller; and he, as principal, is liable to both for the performance of the contract. The failure of a purchaser, who has entered into a forward contract for the purchase of some commodity through a pakka arhatia to take delivery on due date does not exonerate the arhatia from the liability to take delivery from the seller in pursuance of the forward contract. It follows that a pakka arhatia is himself vitally interested in the performance of the contract that has been entered into through him and a custom that provides means to insure the arhatia against prospective loss cannot be characterized as unreasonable or immoral. On the contrary such a custom is calculated to check reckless speculation and to promote fair dealing and the transaction of business on honest lines, and, as such, is reasonable and salutary. The essence of sale is the transfer of the title to the goods for price paid or to be paid. The transferee in such case becomes liable to the transferor of the goods as a debtor for the price to be paid, and not as an agent for the proceeds of the re-sale. The transferor is not concerned with any subsequent fluctuations in price and loss or gain to the goods. The essence of agency to sell, is the delivery of the goods to a person who is to sell them, not as his own property but as the property of the principal who continues to be the owner of the goods and therefore entitled to control their sale, as for instance to fix their price, to dictate the terms of re-sale or to re-sell the goods. He cannot demand the price of the goods before re sale, but only such proceeds as accrue to him on such re-sale. By the terms of a contract between the Government of Mysore and a company, the company were appointed the selling agents of oil manufactured by the Government, and were bound to keep regular books of accounts of all oil received or sold, to remit the sale proceeds less commission to the Government Bankers and to be liable for all moneys recoverable on sales effected without raising any question of bad debts and the Government had also the right to fix the minimum prices at which oil should be sold by the agents. PRISONS ACT (IX OF 1894), Ss. 3 and 4—"Criminal prisoner"—Approver ordered to be detained by Court—Custody.

An approver is not a convicted prisoner but when his detention is ordered by a Court of law under S. 337 (3), Cr. P. Code, he comes within the category of "criminal prisoner" as defined in S. 3 (2) of the Prisons Act and S. 4 of that Act imposes upon the Local Government the duty of providing for prisoners' accommodation in prisons as ordained by that Act. ———S. 40—Compliance by Superintendent of jail—Jurisdiction of court to decide.

Courts under whose warrants under-trial prisoners are detained in jail or the High Court have no jurisdiction to go into the question, whether the Superintendent of the Jail has or has not disregarded or observed the provisions of S. 40. Under the Prisons Act the jurisdiction of the Court extends only to insistence on the due observance of the terms of the writ which it has issued in exercise of its legal powers. The prisoner, if he has any grievance, has to seek redress at the hands of the superior executive authority. PRISONERS ACT (III OF 1900)—Rules—Under trial prisoner—Detention—Interference by Court when justified.

Where a person is detained in prison he is of course subject to the provisions of the Prisons Act and the rules thereunder and if it is found that the action taken by the jail authorities is in conformity with the law the Court will have no power to interfere But if it is found that the action is not warranted by the Prisons Act or the rules thereunder the Court has the power to issue directions regarding the detention. The Court however will be slow to interfere in matters of jail administration and will do so only when the action of the jail authorities is found to be clearly illegal or unjustifiable and interference is necessary in the interests of justice. 50 Bom. 741, Ref. Concurrent findings.

———Concurrent findings—Burden heavy on appellants.

A litigant who seeks before a second appellate tribunal (in this case the Privy Council) to reverse findings of fact which have been arrived at by the trial Judge and have, after consideration, been confirmed on appeal, comes always with a very heavy burden upon his shoulders. But when he is the principal witness in regard to the crucial facts, and has been crushingly discredited by the trial Judge, the weight of his burden is so great that few, if any could survive under it. On an issue of fact concurrent findings should be conclusive, unless where the enforcement of the rule would work obvious injustice, or the violation of some principle of law or procedure. ———Concurrent findings—Interference—Rule.

Concurrent findings of fact will not be disturbed unless it is shown that there has been a miscarriage of justice or the violation of some principle of law or procedure. This does not necessarily imply that their Lordships make their findings their own, for almost ex hypothesi, they have not considered them in detail, but only that where matters of fact have been fairly tried by two local Courts, which are often in a better position to conclude upon them than this Board and the same conclusion has been reached by both, it is not in the public interest that the facts should again be examined in the ultimate Court of appeal. 27 I A. 166; 31 I.A. 127 and (1927) A.C. 515, Ref. A suit by a lessor for rent was dismissed by the High Court on the finding that the lessee had failed to obtain possession of the whole of the leased properties. In appeal before the Board the lessor claimed of rent proportionate to the area of which his lessee obtained possession.

Held, that though this case for an abated rent should have been raised and investigated along with the other questions in the case, it would be an injustice, if the appellant is prepared to submit to the penalties of his failure to raise it earlier, that the respondent should escape from payment of rent in respect of the possession which he could alone attribute to the kabuliyat. ———Practice—Consent decree—Denial of consent by appellant—Interference by Privy Council—Procedure—Remission—Court for enquiry and report.

It is incumbent on the party alleging that there had in fact been no consent to the judgment and that the statement to that effect was a mistake, to take the necessary steps in India to rectify the mistake. Where the judgment contains a statement to the effect that it was passed by consent of parties, the Privy Council will not, in ordinary circumstances, hesitate to take the statements contained in the judgment as correct and will refuse summarily an application stating that such a statement is a mistake. But the circumstances of the present case were peculiar. It appeared that, the appeal, after a partial hearing, was adjourned "as there is a chance of compromise". The compromise broke down and the formal decree which was subsequently drawn up recited only the previous hearing of the case and not any consent of parties and proceeded to set aside the decree of the lower Court. At the time of hearing, the appellant stated in an affidavit that the statement in the judgment to the effect that it was by consent was not correct. PROBATE AND ADMINISTRATION ACT (V OF 1881), Ss. 4, 12 and 90—Hindu will in the mofussil—Executor—Vesting of estate—Date of—Probate not obtained—Title of executor derived from will and not from grant of probate.

The executor of a Hindu will made in the mofussil and not governed by the Hindu Wills Act, 1870, has the estate of the deceased testator vested in him, by virtue of S. 4 of the P. and A. Act, as from the date of the death of the testator and he has all the powers conferred on an executor by the latter Act although he has not taken out probate of the will. Neither the vesting under S. 4 nor the power of disposal under S. 90 of the Act, is dependent upon the grant of probate. In India, as in England, the title of an executor is derived from the will, and not from probate, though it is probate alone which (under S. 12) authenticates his right and dispenses with proof of the execution of the will. The power of exercising prohibition is discretionary and the Court should not be chary of exercising it, to control persons who are entrusted, with the power of imposing any obligation upon individuals and who attempt to exercise those powers in excess of their jurisdiction. The fact that there is a right of appeal is not necessarily fatal to a claim for the issue of a writ of prohibition. But the guiding principle is that the writ in such a case will not issue unless the want of jurisdiction complained of is based upon a breach of a fundamental principle of justice. A promissory note is also a negotiable instrument and under the Negotiable Instruments Act, it is transferable merely by endorsement and delivery. As such, it is clothed with certain incidents intended to facilitate the business of merchants. In a suit on a promissory note, it is open to the defendant to plead that the promissory note executed by him was executed in certain circumstances and was without consideration. PROMISSORY NOTE—Consideration.

———Consideration—Burden of proof.

Were defendants plead want of consideration in a suit on a promissory note, in discharging the burden of proof, it is not always necessary for them to prove want of consideration by producing definite evidence on their own behalf. It is open to them to rely upon the facts and circumstances of the case and also to refer to the flaws in the evidence of the plaintiff himself and then to argue that, on the record of the case as it stands, the burden has been discharged by them. Whether a party had discharged the burden of proof laid upon him is a question for the Court to decide and each case depends upon its own peculiar facts and circumstances. (Addison and Agha Haidar, JJ.) BISHAMBAR DAS v. ISMAIL. 149 I.C. 605 = 6 R.L. 721 = A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 1029.

———Consideration—Burden of proof—Presumption under S. 118, Negotiable Instruments Act.

In a suit on a promissory note the defendants contended that they had affixed their signature to a blank paper, that there was no cash consideration and that they had induced the plaintiff to give evidence in a case by affixing their signature to the note. The Court thereupon cast the burden of proving consideration on the plaintiff.

Held, that the Court erred in not taking into account the presumption under S. 118, Negotiable Instruments Act, and in casting the onus on the plaintiff. (Kendall, J.) JAGMOHAN MISIR v. MENDHAI DUBE. 54 All. 375 = I.R. 1932 All. 65 = 135 I.C. 241 = A.I.R. 1932 All. 164.

A promissory note executed by the defendants in consideration of the plaintiff withdrawing a complaint of a compoundable offence is no doubt a valid instrument. PROMISSORY NOTE—Deposit of.

Where, however, the lower Court has granted a decree to the plaintiff by throwing the burden of proof on the defendant on the ground that S. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act raised a presumption in plaintiff's favour, and the promissory note having been made payable to bearer. S. 118 had in fact no application so that the burden of proof should have been placed on the plaintiff, the proper course in such a case is to remand the case for fresh hearing and not pass a decree to the plaintiff on the original consideration. In a suit on a promissory note, what the defendant really admitted was the execution of the suit promissory note and the receipt of the consideration therefor, but he never meant to admit that he executed the suit promissory note in favour of the plaintiff, seeing that it was on the face of it executed not in his favour but in favour of another person

Held, on a lenient construction of the pleadings, that the defendant could plead on appeal that plaintiff could not sue on such a promissory note. (Ba U, J.) K S. V. CHETTIAR FIRM v. MAHOO. 152 I.C. 410 = 7 R.R. 152 = A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 280.

Where in a suit on a promissory note alleged to be thumb-marked by the deceased executant, the minor sons deny the execution of it by their father, it is necessary that the plaintiff should prove by clear, cogent and reliable evidence that the thumb-impression on the document, is really that of the deceased executant. PROMISSORY NOTE—Original Cause of action.

———Original cause of action—Insufficient stamp—Other evidence of loan.

When a promissory note is executed on account of an antecedent debt, it can seldom be said that the terms of the contract regarding the original loan have been reduced to the form of a document even if the promissory note mentions those terms. In such a case, independent evidence of the liability is admissible even if the promissory note, being insufficiently stamped is not admissible in evidence. On the other hand when the loan and promissory note are part and parcel of the same transaction and the note records the terms of the contract in the form of a document, the terms being mainly that the plaintiff agreed to make a loan and that the defendant agreed to repay that loan. Though S. 91 of the Evidence Act applies so as to preclude evidence of the terms apart from the note and that note being insufficiently stamped, is not admissible in evidence, the factum of loan is not however a term of the contract. That can be proved aliunde; when that is proved or admitted, the plaintiff is entitled to claim it back unless the defendant succeeds in showing that the payment was made in discharge of any previous liability or that he is otherwise entitled to retain it. 6 Nag. The promissory note proved to be inadmissible for non-cancellation of the stamp, and the cash consideration was not only not proved, but plaintiff's agent admitted that nothing was paid on the date of execution of pro-note. Whether when a bill or note is found to be inadmissible in evidence the payee can sue on the original consideration depends upon whether the cause of action with regard to the original consideration is one which is complete in itself, and the debtor then gives a bill or note to the creditor for payment of the money at a future time. ——— Original cause of action—Relief on—Permissibility.

In a suit on a promissory note, it was contended that the plaintiff not being named in the instrument could not sue on the note. The plaintiff alleged that the consideration really moved from him and claimed to sue on the consideration, apart from the promissory note.

Held, that if for any reason a plaintiff's suit upon a promissory note failed he could fall back upon the original consideration and sue upon that, apart from the note; that an implied contract to repay money arose from the fact that the money was lent, that where all the facts giving rise to the alternative claim were fully stated in the plaint, the fact that the plaintiff has not formally asked for that relief in the plaint was no bar to the granting of that relief. 18 C.W.N. 617 (P.C.); 6 Nag.

———Original cause of action—Renewal of earlier note—Later note insufficiently stamped—Relief on earlier transaction.

The plaint as originally brought was based on a promissory note of 1925. Subsequently, however, the plaint was amended and the suit was based on an earlier promissory note of 1922. It appeared that the later note was not properly stamped and was therefore inadmissible in evidence. It was further shown that the later note was merely in renewal of liability under the original note and there was an endorsement of discharge to that effect.

Held, that S. 91 of the Evidence Act was not a bar to the suit of the plaintiff based on the earlier transaction which was distinct and separate from the execution of the later note. Right to sue.

———Right to sue—Assignee—Release of maker by payee.

Negotiable instruments can be enforced by an assignee only when the assignment has been effected in accordance with the provisions of the Act, and transfer of the rights of a party under a note to order, to some one else, unless effected by operation of law, must be effected by indorsement and delivery and not otherwise. Where therefore a pro-note is assigned by the real owner, and the benamidar executes an acknowledgment admitting that he was merely a benamidar and that the assignor was the real beneficiary, the assignee is not entitled to sue on the pro note, specially when the payee of the note has expressly released the maker. No consideration is required for such a release and the fact that it was collusive is immaterial. (Case-law discussed.) ———Right to sue—Beneficial owner—Benamidar a party also.

No one can maintain a suit on a promissory note except the holder thereof. The fact that the holder has been made a party and has admitted that he is only the plaintiff's benamidar makes no difference.

If the beneficiary is in a position to give a valid discharge the fact that the promissory note does not stand in his name will not disentitle him to a decree in the suit. If the person in whose name the documents stand is a party to the litigation and does not dispute the plaintiff's right to recover the loan and give a valid discharge, there is no reason why the suit should not be maintainable and why a decree should not be made in favour of the beneficiary. The Provident Funds Act is not intended to affect the rights of the dependants of the subscriber or depositor to share the fund inter se in accordance with the personal law of the deceased, except to the extent expressly mentioned in S. 3, Cl. (2) of the Act, that is to say, to protect the fund from assignment by the subscriber and from attachment by creditors who have advanced money to him or to his dependants during his lifetime. Hence where the subscriber is a Mahomedan, a nominee of his, though as such has an absolute right to receive the money does not thereby become the absolute owner thereof. Thus it is rather unfortunate that a Mahomedan should not be able to give directions that the fund should after his death be distributed amongst his dependants in a manner inconsistent with the Mahomedan Law of intestate succession, although a non-Mahomedan may do so by signing a nomination paper ———S. 3 (1) and (2)—Nomination made in consideration of loan—Validity.

Where a person has made a declaration that certain person will be entitled on his death, to receive payment on his deposit in the institution, the declaration is tantamount to a nomination which is quite a different thing from an assignment or a charge which is void under S. 3 (2), Provident Funds Act. The declaration on the face of it, is to take effect only in the event of the subscriber's death and it is in the nature of a bequest taking effect only in the event of the death of the subscriber before the deposit becomes payable, whereas an assignment takes effect whenever the fund becomes due even if the subscriber be alive. A nomination which purports to confer upon the nominee the right to receive the sums standing to the credit of a subscriber in the fund on the death of the subscriber is not invalid as contravening the prohibition against assignment or charge under S. 3 (1) merely because the nomination has been made in consideration of a loan and not on account of mere love and affection. It is inconceivable that a nomination valid in all other respects is valid only when made without consideration or in consideration of mere love and affection but is invalid when it is made for consideration. Per King, C.J., Srivastava, J. (Zia-ul-Hasan, J. Contra.)—The words "notwithstanding anything contained in any law for the time being in force" in S. 5 (1) have the effect of conferring upon a depositor a right to give his provident fund money as he thinks best, notwithstanding the provision of his personal law. It is therefore open to a Muslim depositor to nominate one of his heirs to receive the Provident Fund on his death, even though his personal law prohibits a will in favour of one of the heirs to the exclusion of the others. The nominee is not only entitled to realise the money from the authority administering the fund, but also to appropriate it to his own use and benefit free from any charge or attachment or liability enforceable by other heirs or by creditors. ——S. 5 (2)—Construction and scope—Second certificate—If barred.

The effect of S. 5 (2) of the Provident Funds Act is that the nomination will entitle the nominee to a certificate without any proof of his right thereto, such as an applicant for a succession certificate has otherwise to establish. But it does not go further and mean that the other provisions of the Act, which may afford as a bar will also be operative. W N. 1473=A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 173=66 M.L J. 207.

The effect of S 4 of the Provident Funds Act is that in a competition between two persons, it is the nominee who holds a certificate who is entitled to the money. (Mukerji, A.C.J. and S.K. Ghose, J.) ATUL-CHANDRA SEN v. KANNAMMAL. 62 Cal. 272=155 I.C. 749=7 R.C. 623=39 C.W.N. 47=A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 271 (1).

The provisions of the Act relating to the right of nominees to receive the Provident Fund are not to be read, as though they were controlled by, or subject to any other law for the time being in force, or subject to any disposition whether testamentary or otherwise, by the subscriber or depositor. Unless the nomination is cancelled by the subscriber or varied by a nomination in favour of another person, the nominee, on the death of the subscriber must be regarded as having had conferred on him or her an absolute right to receive the Provident Fund. The fact that letters of administration or probate is granted to a different person does not prevent the nominee from claiming under the Act the full amount of the sum due on death of a subscriber to the fund. 64 I.C. 62; A.I.R. 1924 Sind 57 and A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 773, Dist. ———S. 5 (1)—"Notwithstanding anything contained in any law"—Interpretation—If includes personal law.

Per King, C.J., Srivastava, J. (Zia-ul-Hasan, J. Contra.)—The words "notwithstanding anything contained in any law for the time being in force" in S. 5 1) have the effect of conferring upon a depositor a right to give his provident fund money as he thinks best, notwithstanding the provision of his personal law. It is therefore open to a Muslim depositor to nominate one of his heirs to receive the Provident Fund on his death, even though his personal law prohibits a will in favour of one of the heirs to the exclusion of the others. The nominee is not only entitled to realise the money from the authority administering the fund, but also to appropriate it to his own use and benefit free from any charge or attachment or liability enforceable by other heirs or by creditors. (King, C.J., Srivastava and Zia-ul-Hasan, JJ.) MAHOMED NAIM v. MUNIMUNNISSA. 159 I.C. 596=8 R.O. 185=1935 O.W.N. 1296=A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 32 (F B.).

———S. 5 (2)—Construction and scope—Second certificate—If barred.

The effect of S. 5 (2) of the Provident Funds Act is that the nomination will entitle the nominee to a certificate without any proof of his right thereto, such as an applicant for a succession certificate has otherwise to establish. But it does not go further and mean that the other provisions of the Act, which may afford as a bar will also be operative. Therefore, the fact that a certificate has been previously granted to another does not bar the grant of the certificate to the nominee. (*Mukerji, A.J.C. and S.K. PROVINCIAL INSOLVENCY ACT (III OF 1907), S. 28—Contingent liability to surety—Debt, if provable.

A contingent liability to which a debtor may become subject before his discharge is a debt provable under S. 28. A contingent liability of an insolvent debtor to his surety to which he did not become subject before his discharge is not a debt to which the Act would apply. ———English decisions—Relevancy.

The Provincial Insolvency Act is nothing more than a copy of the Bankruptcy Act of England regarding notice of suspension of payment and that being so, the authorities which have been decided from time to time on this provision in the English Act are necessarily authorities for the Court. ———Ex parte adjudication—Setting aside—Limitation.

There is no provision in the Provincial Insolvency Act for the setting aside of an order of adjudication of an insolvent passed ex parte. Application for setting aside such an order has to be made under O. 9, R. 13 and is governed by Art. 164 of the Limitation Act. ———Inherent powers of Court—Orders for ends of justice.

———Inherent powers of Court—Stay of insolvency proceedings.

Though the Provincial Insolvency Act does not expressly empower the Court to pass an order staying the insolvency proceedings, still the Court is competent to pass such an order in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction on the analogy of somewhat similar provision contained in S. 94, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. ———Retrospective effect—Adjudication under old Act—Applicability of new Act.

The provisions of the new Provincial Insolvency Act have no retrospective effect. Consequently where a debtor files his insolvency petition under the old Act (1907) and secures an order of adjudication in his favour, the order confers certain rights upon him which cannot be taken away by the new Act. The old Act applies to such a case and the creditors cannot obtain the annulment of the order of adjudication under the new Act nor can they claim exemption under S. 78 (2). (*Ferrers, J. Application under.

———S. 4—Application under—Form of—No plaint or application necessary.

It is not necessary that proceedings under S. 4, in order that thay may be valid, should be initiated by a plaint or a regular application. Certain property was claimed by the receiver to have vested in the insolvent; but the insolvent's father objected that the property did not belong to the judgment-debtor. Subsequent to the death of the father, one of the creditors applied to sell the property which had descended to the insolvent from his father and to distribute the proceeds and on the report of the receiver, the property was ordered to be taken possession of by the receiver and sold. Objection was raisd by the sons of the insolvent that their grandfather had bequeathed the property to them by a will. The Judge held that the will had not been proved. The sons then instituted a suit for a declaration that the property was theirs by virtue of a will and could not vest in the receiver. The trial Judge held that the suit did not lie in view of the order of the Insolvency Judge. It was contended on appeal that the proceedings before the Insolvency Judge were not under S. 4 as they were not initiated by an application and that the suit was not barred.

Held, that it was open to the Court to take proceedings suo motu under S. 4, that in this case it was moved by one of ths creditors and also by the receiver, that the proceedings of the Insolvency Judge were under S. 4 and binding on parties to litigation and that the present suit did not lie. ———Ss. 4 and 28 (2)—Application under—Leave of Court—Application praying for declaration of insolvent's title to property and for direction to Official Receiver to sell—Maintainability—No formal request for leave.

An application was made to the Insolvency Court under S. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act praying for a declaration that certain property belonged to the insolvent and for a direction to the Official Receiver to sell the said property for the benefit of the general body of creditors. The Official Receiver was made a party to the application and it was alleged in the affidavit, filed in support of the application, that a petition was filed before the Receiver asking him to take up the matter and move the Court but that he rejected the petition although all the necessary materials were placed before him.

Held, (i) that the application fell within S. 28 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act and would not lie without the leave of the Court; (ii) that the requirements of S. 28 (2) had been sufficiently complied with, because there really was an application before the Court for leave to proceed with the application. Although it is imperative that consent should be obtained before the institution of the proceedings, a good deal has to be said in favour of the view that by implication the leave of the Court was being asked for and that it was not therefore necessary that a formal request should be made for such leave. Jurisdiction.

———S. 4—Jurisdiction — Discretion— Complicated questions of law involved.

The exercise of the jurisdiction which the Insolvency Court derives from S. 4 is purely discretionary and whether in any particular case an Insolvency Court should refuse to exercise its jurisdiction depends upon the facts of such case An application was filed under S. 4 to decide the question of the validity or otherwise of a mortgage. The amount at stake was a very large one. Complicated questions of law were involved in determining the question. There had been two decrees of competent Courts in which the mortgage had been held valid and given effect to. No useful purpose was likely to be served so far as the other creditors besides the applicant were concerned.

Held, that it would be an abuse of the powers given to the insolvency Court under S. 4 to re-adjudicate on the question and it was not expedient to decide the dispute referred in application under S. 4. Properties worth over Rs. 12,000 which admittedly belonged to the insolvent at one time were sold by the Official Receiver and purchased by certain persons who in their turn subsequently sold them to the wife of the insolvent. One of the creditors alleged that the wife was only a name lender and that the properties really belonged to the insolvent as they were purchased with his own money which he had secreted with his wife. The Insolvency Court declined jurisdiction under S. 4 and referred the party to a separate suit.

Held, that the case was eminently one in which it was not desirable that the Insolvency Court should have exercised its jurisdiction under S. 4, as the dispute was of a difficult character and involved a very large sum of money and as the result of assuming jurisdiction would have been to deprive the unsuccessful party of a right of first appeal to the High Court and perhaps an appeal to the Privy Council. Therefore the Insolvency Court is competent to deal with a question arising out of a transfer made more than two years before adjudication and alleged to be made to defraud or defeat the claims of creditors. tions of title raised, no matter by whom which the Court may not deem it expedient or necessary to determine and which, on the other hand, the Court may, in its discretion, leave to be determined by an ordinary Civil Court. But if a stranger raises a question of title for its decision, or submits to an investigation by it of a claim of title preferred against him, the decision when made is binding on him. The Court should ordinarily decline to go into questions of title against strangers where the receiver claims no higher right than the insolvent himself; but if the Court, in its discretion, chooses to determine the question, the decision cannot be said to be bad on the ground of want of jurisdiction or to be any the less a decision binding between the parties under sub S. S. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act which is in terms identical with S. 7 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act confers plenary powers on the Insolvency Court to deal with claims affecting third parties to the insolvency. It may decide any question which it may deem it expedient or necessary to decide for the purpose of doing complete justice or making a complete distribution of property, and in doing so, it has ample power to decide questions of title arising between the estate of an insolvent and a third party. This jurisdiction is no doubt of a discretionary character and in cases which involve difficult questions of title, the Insolvency Court will be well advised in asking the receiver to institute proceedings in an ordinary Civil Court. ——Ss. 4 and 53—Powers of Court — Transfer by transferee of insolvent to third party—Order of annulment obtained by Receiver against first transferee—Effect of, as against second transferee.

Where property has been transferred by the transferee of an insolvent to a third party and the receiver is aware of the transfer the dispute is reality between the receiver on the one hand and the subsequent transferee on the other and not between the receiver, and the first transferee who has no longer got any interest in the property left. In order to start a proceeding under S. 4 the application should therefore be by the receiver against the person who is now claiming title to the property and an adjudication by the Court on such dispute would be final and would bar a second suit and would be binding on the parties to the proceeding. But if the receiver chooses to proceed under S. 4 against the first transferee who has no interest left in the property and obtains an order against him either ex parte or after contest, he cannot use that order as a final adjudication of the matter in dispute as against the real claimant of the title (*Sulaiman, C. The insolvency Court has no power under S. 4 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act to order the sale of the debtor's property before adjudication. The section only authorizes the Court to decide objections and questions raised by third parties, and gives finality to the decisions of the Insolvency Court on questions of title. S. 4 (3) moreover does not create any extraordinary power of sale; it only permits a sale of the saleable interest of the insolvent when the Court does not think it necessary of expedient to decide questions of title. A declaration of his inability to pay his debts may be made by a debtor to one or more of his creditors in terms and under circumstances which do not suggest that he means to stop payment of his debts as they fall due. Such a declaration may be couched in language which clearly implies that the debtor means to pay nobody in full and to place his assets at the disposal of his creditors. But there should be a definite intimation to the creditors that the debtor intends to suspend the payment of all his debts. Where in response to a letter by one of the creditors, the debtor mentioned his inability to pay and suggested that money might be raised on some shares pledged with the creditor in order to meet the claims of the pressing creditors only and the debtor further expressed his willingness to a scheme of creating a trust for the liquidation of his debts.

——S. 6 (g)—Suspension of payment—False denial of debt due to one of creditors—If amounts to.

Notice of suspension of payment means a declaration by the debtor that he does not intend to pay any of his debts, not that he does not intend to pay the debt of one particular creditor. Furthermore, the indebtedness must be admitted, and the notice must be a specific and deliberate act on the part of the debtor from which his inability or refusal to pay his debts generally can be plainly inferred. A false denial of the debt due to one particular creditor is not, and cannot be construed as a notice of suspension of payment of debts generally. A. I.R. 1933 Rang. 41, Ref. Held, that the intimation in question amounted to a notice that the debtors had suspended or were about to suspend payment of their debts and that it amounted to an act of insolvency within the meaning of S. 6 (g) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. ——S. 6 (g)—Suspension of payment—What amounts to—Test.

Principles to be applied in determining whether debtor's statement amounts to suspension of payment are as follows: The first is that a mere statement by a debtor that he is unable to pay his debts however insolvent he may be is not necessarily a notice within the meaning of the Act that he is suspending or about to suspend payment. The second principle is that one has to ascertain what the words used by the debtor would reasonably and ordinarily mean to the mind of a creditor. The third is that in construing the statement of the debtor it has to be seen whether he has clearly indicated that not only is he not going to pay a particular creditor but that he intends to deal with his creditors collectively. It may be added that although no written notice of such suspension is necessary, yet it must be in a sense formal and must not merely be the result of a casual conversation. Appellants offered such cash as was in their possession and security for the remainder of their debt. On this the District Judge concluded that there was an admission of the appellant that they were giving notice of either suspension or intended suspension of payment and that it was sufficient to bring the case within S. 6 (g).

Held, applying the above principles, that the statement in question could not be treated as a notice of suspension and that the admission of the debtor by itself was not sufficient to bring it within the meaning of Cl. (g) of S. 6. (Wort, A. C. J. and Kulwant Sahay, J.) LAKHI PRASAD SINGHANIA v. UGRAH MISR. 13 Pat. 78=148 I.C. 39=6 R.P. 434=14 Pat L.T. 691 A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 461.

The period of three months prescribed by S. 9 (1) (c) of the Provincial Insolvency Act is a condition precedent and not a period of limitation for the filing of the insolvency petition. The petitioning creditor must, therefore, on the day he presents his petition, have in view some act of insolvency which the debtor has committed within the preceding three months; and he cannot make use of any act of insolvency committed outside that period of three months, because after that period, the transaction ceases to be an act of insolvency. Where, therefore, the period of three months expires during the vacation of the Court, a petition presented on the reopening day is not a valid petition which can be sustained. S. 10 of the General Clauses Act cannot be relied on so as to extend the time until the reopening day. (*Beasley, C. ——S. 10—Assets of insolvent—Occupancy rights under Punjab Tenancy Act.

Where a person applies for adjudication, the fact that his land consists of occupancy rights which cannot be sold without the consent in writing of the landlords as provided for in S. 56 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, is no ground to hold that it is not a realizable asset of the insolvent, unless it is shown that an application had been made to the landlord and the landlord had refused to consent to the transfer of these rights. ——S. 10—Joint petition—Maintainability.

The word "debtor" in S. 10 of the Provincial Insolvency Act may be interpreted in the plural under S. 13 of the General Clauses Act. Therefore a joint petition by three brothers for adjudicating them as insolvents is maintainable, if the other conditions mentioned in S. 10 of the Act are satisfied and if it would not be bad for multifariousness. ——S. 10—Petition under—Duty of Court.

In an application for adjudication all that a debtor has to do is to afford prima facie proof of his inability to pay his debts and it is not for the Court to hold on a nice calculation of the assets that these will satisfy the debts and therefore adjudication should be withheld; when dealing with an application by the debtor the Court is not required to determine whether or not the debts are fictitious. This is a matter which will arise later. Only two questions arise for decision in an application by a debtor: (1) whether his debts amount to Rs. 500 and (2) whether he is unable to pay his debts.

Semble.—Adjudication is now the rule rather than the exception and it cannot be too frequently impressed on Courts dealing with such applications that a meticulous examination of the assets and liabilities and a carefully balanced adjustment of these is not now necessary or required. ——S. 10—Petition under—Facts entitling.

In order to entitle a debtor to apply under S. 10 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the question for consideration is not whether the debts can be satisfied immediately out of the assets, but whether the assets are so locked up that the debtor will be unable to pay at the times he is called upon to pay. (Weston.) MOHAN LAL v. RATNA. 1935 A.M.L J. 51.

——S. 10—Petition under—Inability to pay debts—Burden of proof.

Inability to pay debts is a condition precedent to the presentation of a debtor's petition. Before a debtor can seek the protection of the Insolvency Court he has to satisfy the Court that he is unable to pay his debts. But where the amendment is one that goes to the root of the petition and alters the substance of the act of insolvency alleged, the Court ought not to permit the amendment to be made, if the effect of so doing would be that the amended petition would be re-presented more than three months after the date of the act of insolvency alleged. Reading Ss. 20 and 56 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the following principles are deducible from the provisions of law contained therein:—(a) An interim receiver may be appointed by any Insolvency Court with directions to take immediate possession of the property of the alleged insolvents; (b) the powers to be exercised by an interim receiver shall be determined by the Court with reference to O. 40, C. P. Code; (c) to ensure compliance with its order the Insolvency Court can remove a person in whose possession such property is, but it cannot remove any person whom the insolvent has not a present right so to remove. Where the property is under a mortgage and the mortgagee is in possession through his tenant, in ordinary circumstances the Court is not competent to remove the mortgagee from the possession of the property as the insolvent himself cannot do so. Where the person through whom the mortgagee is in possession is the insolvent himself, the receiver takes the property subject to the burden, if any, and is entitled to elect whether to retain it or not, if the burden is too onerous to be borne by him. If the interim receiver elects to remain in possession, he shall have to discharge the obligations attached to the property; but if he does not, the insolvent tenant who has been dispossessed shall have to be let in possession. Under no circumstances, therefore, the property can be restored to the mortgagee. But this does not mean that the Judge, if he shall be inclined to hear any evidence presented by the creditor, is not entitled to hear such evidence. He may, if he likes, hear such evidence and may hear as much evidence as he may think fit in the circumstances of the case. Where, during the cross-examination of the petitioning debtor, it was elicited by the creditors that he had assigned the greater part of his property to his wife in satisfaction of an alleged dower debt, and the Judge allowed the creditors to offer evidence on which he found that the assignment was a mere farzi transaction and that the debtor was still in possession of, and controlling the property, and rejected the petition as he was not satisfied that the debtor was unable to pay his debts.

Where the father of a joint Hindu family is adjudicated an insolvent, only his share of the property vests in the Official Receiver and the shares of the undivided sons do not actually vest in the receiver, but only the father's power to sell such shares. But where such shares of the undivided sons have been attached before the father's share vested in the receiver there can be no vesting of even the father's power to sell the shares in the receiver. Where, in a suit against the father and his sons, after the entire family property was attached the father became insolvent and the receiver sought to take possession of the whole property.

Held, that as on the day of vesting in the receiver the share of the sons also was under a valid attachment, the rights which vested in the receiver did not include the father's power to sell the shares of the sons and that the Official Receiver was therefore not entitled to claim delivery of the entire property. A Hindu father's right to dispose of the joint family property in order to satisfy his own debts is property within the meaning of S. 28 of the Insolvency Act and vests in the receiver who is entitled to seize the entire family property and transfer it in order to satisfy the debts of the father. It is not incumbent on such a receiver to obtain an order of the Court, execute it and attached the family property. On 4-2 1931, appellant to whom the insolvent owed moneys filed a suit against him, without leave of the Court, for the specific performance of an agreement by the insolvent executed on 19-3-1930, undertaking to execute a mortgage in appellant's favour. The insolvent appeared by pleader on 31-7-1931 and filed a written statement on 7-8-1931, but subsequently withdrew his defence on 8-9-1931 on which date a decree was passed against the insolvent. The order of adjudication was passed later on 8 10 1931 vesting the properties in the Official Receiver. The latter filed an application on 13 2-1932 to declare void the decree obtained by the appellant against the insolvent.

An insolvent had executed a mortgage of both movable and immovable properties. But the deed was unregistered and was therefore invalid as regards the latter. In an application under S. 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act the Court held that the document was not invalid as a whole, but was valid as regards the movables, i.e., machineries, and stated in the concluding part of its order that the mortgage was valid so far as the movables were concerned and was not void under S. 54. Some movables other than the machineries were in the insolvent's possession and it was contended that the order must be limited to the machineries alone and that the other movables which were in the insolvent's possession vested in the receiver under S. 28 (3) of the Act.

Held, the movables referred to in the concluding part of the order covered all the movables and not merely the machineries, and that the other movables did not vest in the receiver, and they did not suffer from the doctrine of reputed ownership as laid down in S. 28 (3) of the Act; consequently the mortgagee was entitled to their value from the Official Receiver. ———Ss. 28 (2) and 31—Scope—Application for arrest of insolvent judgment debtor—Leave of Court—Necessity.

The broad principle underlying S. 28 (2) is that once a person is adjudicated Insolvent creditors seeking any remedy against him must come to the Insolvency Court to get leave for that purpose and that principle cannot be cut down. In the case of execution petitions pending at the time of the adjudication, there is nothing in the Act to prevent the creditor from proceeding to arrest his debtor unless the latter applies of the Court for protection under S. 31 (if he has not already applied under S. 23). There is, therefore, still scope for the application of S. 31, which cannot be superfluous. A decree passed in a suit which offends against the provisions of S. 28 of the Act is not a nullity. The object of S. 28 is to secure to the Official Receiver the unrestricted right to dispose of the insolvents' property, and it is to preserve that right, that suits and other proceedings aimed at the insolvent's property are prohibited. But it is the receiver and receiver alone, and no one else, who has any concern with the insolvency and its administration. Where, therefore, a creditor sues the members of a joint Hindu family, two of whom have been adjudicated insolvents, and obtains a decree against all and executes the decree against the non-insolvents, claiming rateable distribution out of assets realised in execution by a prior decree-holder, it is not for the latter to object to the claim for rateable distribution on the ground that the later suit offended against S. 28, and that the decree is void and inexecutable. It is for the Official Receiver and not for the prior decree-holder to interfere, if the insolvent's estate is in jeopardy as the result of the decree and execution. Nor can there be any prejudice at all or danger to the estate, when the money realised by the sale and claimed by way of rateable distribution is not part of the insolvent's estate, but only of the non insolvents. Once the sale is held, the Official Receiver's power to sell is extinguished, and it does not matter to the receiver who shares or does not share in the money realised, so long as no part of the insolvent's estate is affected. If a debtor has been adjudged insolvent, has placed all his assets at the disposal of the Insolvency Court without concealing any material facts relating to his pecuniary position and has not been guilty of any fraud or dishonesty in relation to his creditors or his estate, an order of protection should ordinarily be granted. In such matters the receiver is not a proper party, but the creditors concerned are the proper parties. Hence if any creditor wishes to have any amendment made of the schedule as framed by the Court under S. 33 he must cause notice to issue to all the other creditors who would thereby be affected, and their objections be heard before any alteration or amendment of the schedule can be ordered by the Court and in an application or appeal in connexion with this, the receiver is not a necessary party. 37 All. 252 and 39 M. 479, Rel on. PROV. INSOLV. ACT (1920), S. 35.

The insolvent got himself fraudulently and collusively adjudicated by setting up a bogus creditor. Later on the original creditor who had sued to enforce his claim dropped out and another bogus creditor who stepped in to continue the proceedings, put in proof of his claim before the Official Receiver. The same having been rejected, he appealed to the District Judge who however dismissed his appeal and at the same time annulled the adjudication. Thereupon another creditor applied under O. 47, R. 1 to review the said order but it was also rejected.

Held, that the District Judge acted wrongly in annulling the adjudication in the absence of a prayer to that effect by either party and that the same constituted an error apparent on the face of the record so as to sustain an application for review. ——S. 37—Effect of—Annulment.

Once an order of annulment of adjudication has been passed, S. 37 applies and there ceases to be any insolvent or any receiver. All acts theretofore done by the Court are valid and subject to that the property of the debtor vests in such person as the Court may appoint and in default of any such appointment in the debtor himself. After the order of annulment, the Court has no jurisdiction to pass any order affecting the property of a person other than the debtor. Where therefore the Court rejects the claims of a creditor as unproved, before the order of annulment its act is an act theretofore done by the Court and is valid; so also the dispositions of property and payments made before the order are duly made. So long as the order of annulment is in force, the Court has no jurisdiction to reopen the distribution of dividends at the instance of a creditor and to demand a refund of money from the other creditors to whom a dividend has been distributed. The remedy of the creditor lies in challenging the order of annulment of adjudication and so long as that order is unchallenged he has no remedy in the Insolvency Court. A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 223, Foll. The unconditional annulment of the adjudication pending a creditor's application to set aside a sale of the insolvent's property by the Official Receiver does not deprive the Insolvency Court of its jurisdiction to hear and determine the application. The effect of S. 37 is that the order of annulment will not invalidate the acts of the Court or of the Official Receiver theretofore done; but they do not acquire a degree of sacrosanctity or immunity from attack by way of appeal which they would not have possessed had there been no order of annulment. ——S 37—Effect of annulment—Subsequent order vesting property in receiver—Validity of.

It is not correct to say that after the order of annulment the insolvency proceeding comes to an end ipso facto. Though the effect of passing an order of annulment without any condition is to vest the property in the debtor, there is nothing in the Insolvency Act to prevent the Court subsequently from giving suitable directions or vesting the property in the receiver for the protection of the creditors. Such an order is not a review of the order of annulment but is supplementary to it, and can be passed under the inherent powers of the Court under S. 151, C. P. Code, attracted by S. 5 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. No doubt, if subsequent to annulment and before the vesting order, the insolvent has transferred the property to a bona fide purchaser, such a purchaser perhaps may not be affected. But the parties to the insolvency proceeding will be bound by the order. (*Courtney-Terrell, C. ——S. 37—Effect of annulment—Vesting property in debtor.

The words in S. 37 (2) "as the Court may declare" govern only the vesting of the property in the debtor. ——S. 37—Powers of appointee.

A bare appointee, i.e., an appointee under a vesting order which does not impose any condition relating to the property of the debtor) has no authority to deal with the estate of the insolvent as agent or on behalf of the insolvent except as regards realization of the insolvent's claim against others. When the Court vests the property of the insolvent in an appointee the property is put out of the control of the insolvent, but the appointee is no more than the custodian of such property. Hence the creditors are not entitled to any relief against such appointee. All that they are entitled to do as regards him is to execute any decree that they may obtain against the insolvent by getting a garnishee order on account of his custody of the property belonging to the insolvent. The Insolvency Court will in such a case have full power to give directions to the appointee as to the realisation and disposal of the debtor's assets. That power, however, should not be used arbitrarily, and should be used not in the interests of this or that creditor, but in the interests of the whole body of creditors; in other words the only proper order for the Court to pass is that the appointee should continue to realise and distribute the debtor's property in accordance with the provisions of the Act. ——S 37—Powers of Court on annulment—Order for distribution of assets among creditors—Legality.

S. 37 does not allow an Insolvency Court on annulling an insolvency to proceed to distribute the assets of the insolvent among any of the creditors. The distribution of assets is a proceeding in insolvency and by annulling the insolvency, the Court comes to the conclusion that it will not proceed with the insolvency. Having come to that conclusion the course open to the Court is either to return the property to the debtor on condition that he furnishes security which will make it available to the creditors to take their remedy under the ordinary civil law, or pending such security or for some other reason the Court may direct the property of the insolvent in the hands of the receiver to vest in a certain person. But the words "to vest in such person" do not mean distributing the property among the creditors. Such vesting is only for the purpose apparently of making the property available to creditors to proceed through the Civil Court. ———S. 37—Rights of creditors on annulment.

The consequences of annulment of adjudication are different to those of a discharge. On the annulment of adjudication, there is nothing to prevent a creditor from pursuing his remedy in a Court of law if his debt has not been scheduled in the insolvency proceedings. So where, after a composition scheme had been sanctioned the adjudication was annulled, a creditor in whose favour a cheque had been given by the insolvent and who could not cash it owing to the adjudication, is entitled to bring a suit against the debtor for recovery of the amount due under the cheque. ———S. 37—Scope—Vesting in appointee—Effect of—Debts coming into existence after annulment of adjudication—Liability of appointee to pay—Crown debt—Priority.

Where the Insolvency Court on the annulment of an adjudication vests the property in the Official Receiver or other person appointed by it, the appointee under S. 37 of the Act does not hold the property for the benefit of the insolvent. He holds the property not for this or that individual creditor, but for the benefit of the whole body of creditors. But it does not mean that the property can be distributed only amongst those creditors who would be entitled to it under the provisions of the Insolvency Act, in other words among those whose debts are provable in insolvency. The scheme of S. 37 is to enable an orderly distribution of the assets of the insolvent which under S. 37 the Court has vested in its appointee, and to place those assets at the disposal of those creditors who would be able to proceed against the debtor if the property had reverted to him by reason of the annulment. A creditor can therefore enforce against the Official Receiver or appointee a debt due to him which was not provable in insolvency and which came into existence after the annulment of the adjudication. A crown debt is entitled to priority quite irrespective of the Insolvency Act. Court-fee due to Government in respect of suits filed by the insolvent in forma pauperis after the annulment of his adjudication is a crown debt and must therefore be paid by the appointee under S. 37 out of the assets in his hands. ———S. 38—Composition scheme—Circumstances to be considered—Consent of majority of creditors—Duty of Court.

Although S. 38 has provided that no scheme shall be approved unless the requisite majority of the creditors' consent, still even if there is that consent of the creditors, the Court must exercise its judicial discretion before approving of the scheme, that is a discretion founded on sufficient reasons after considering all aspects of the case and ascertaining the facts so far as possible. Where the scheme was that the whole of the insolvent's assets should be assigned to one of the creditors on his undertaking to pay the other creditors six annas in the Rupee and where the court approved of the same because the majority had approved it, and where it was represented for those creditors that if the Official Receiver administered the estate of the insolvent it would lead to considerable delay and expense and where the Court had offered the assets of the insolvent to the objecting creditor on the same terms and he was not willing to accept the offer, and where it appeared on the other hand that the Court had omitted to consider a number of circumstances, namely, that the Official Receiver had reported against the scheme, that the extent and value of the assets belonging to the insolvent were in doubt, that the insolvent's conduct in failing to appear before the Official Receiver and produce accounts was bad, that the creditor who had taken over the assets of the insolvent under the scheme was a very near relation of his, that the insolvent had himself admitted that his object in consenting to the scheme was to revive his money-lending business and that the scheme was not in fact profitable to the creditors :

Held, that the lower Court had erred in attaching too much weight to the circumstance that the majority of the creditors had approved of the proposed scheme and in failing to take into account the other important aspects of the matter and that in the circumstances the scheme should not have been approved.

Held, however, that in view of the delay and the practical difficulties in restoring the status quo the order of the lower Court should not be set aside.

Per Reilly, J.—The duty of the Insolvency Court is to see that the assets are administered through the proper and ordinary machinery of the Court and not to require, nor even invite any creditor or other person to take over the estate on certain terms and carry out the functions of the Court for it. The control that the Insolvency Court retains of the insolvency even after orders under S. 39, Provincial Insolvency Act, are passed, are in order that the composition may in fact be carried out and it has powers under S. 40 to re-adjudge the debtor an insolvent in certain circumstances. Insolvency proceedings continue only for the purpose of giving effect to the composition. But they do not continue for all purposes except in so far as Ss. 37 and 40 require their continuance. An annulment is an annulment and the proceedings are at an end. It can never be said that every section in the Act continues to be applicable. Therefore no leave of the Court is necessary under S. 28 of the Act for the institution of a suit by a creditor not bound by the composition. A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 529, Foll.; A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 157, Expl. ———S. 39—Rights of creditor.

The policy of the Insolvency Act is that when a person is indebted, all his debts should be dealt with in the insolvency. It does not seem to be right that a creditor who has got a debt provable in insolvency should stand aside when all the other creditors or most of them have their debts dealt with by the Insolvency Court and refuse to come in or take notice of a composition scheme and then as soon as the adjudication is annulled, proceed once more to harass the insolvent. Of the two Acts, the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act seems to carry out the policy more correctly, because the plain meaning of the word in S. 30 of the Act is that if any composition creditor has a debt which he could prove in insolvency and does not do so, he is nevertheless bound by the composition. But in the Provincial Insolvency Act, S. 39, if strictly followed, means that a creditor whose debt is not entered in the schedule is not bound by the composition and can have a remedy elsewhere against the insolvent. Where the creditors of an insolvent agree to a composition and one of the creditors, who had a decree against the insolvent did not prove his debt in insolvency and was not a party to the composition proceedings and after annulment of the order of adjudication he sought to execute the decree by arresting the judgment-debtor.

Held, that under S. 39, Provincial Insolvency Act, the creditor was entitled to pursue the remedy he liked. But in the circumstances of this case, arrest of the judgment-debtor was refused by the revision Court also. A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 529, Rel. on. The creditor subsequently filed a suit against the debtor and the sureties pleaded bar under S. 39, Provincial Insolvency Act.

Held, that the sureties and the creditor had agreed that the debt was to be excluded from the composition and that in those circumstances S. 39, Provincial Insolvency Act, could not be any bar to a suit upon the excluded claim. In a case where no vesting order is made at the time of annulment and no directions are given by the Court to the receiver, the estate with its liabilities reverts to the insolvent and therefore the Official Receiver appointed on the adjudication ceases to represent the estate of the insolvent and the receiver no longer represents the creditors. As soon as an order of annulment coupled with vesting order under S. 37 is made, all acts done by the receiver shall be valid and the property of the insolvent shall vest in such person as the Court may appoint. The consequences of the annulment are that the insolvent does not get back any property which has already been distributed amongst his creditors, and as to such property, as till remains in hand, the Court will, to protect the creditors, make an order vesting it in such person as the Court may appoint with a view to distribute the same. That person may proceed to sell and distribute the property among the creditors then existing and not call for any future claims. He should proceed to divide the property in his hand amongst the creditors, whose claims have been admitted and entered in the schedule. 3 Rang. 201; 52 Mad. 648 and 108 I. C. 603, Ref. debtor or in some other person unconditionally or imposes condition when making the order, the Court, after the insolvency has been annulled under S. 43, has no jurisdiction thereafter to pass any order affecting the property of any person other than the debtor. Hence when an insolvency has been annulled under the provisions of S. 43 and the receiver has, before the order of annulment, applied to the Court to have a transfer of property set aside under the provisions of S. 53 or S. 54 of the Act, the Court has no jurisdiction after the order of annulment of the insolvency proceedings to continue the proceedings under S. 53 or S. 54 of the Act. The order of annulment, on failure of the insolvent to apply for discharge, is intended to punish the insolvent by withdrawing from him the protection which he gets by the order of adjudication. A person was adjudicated on a creditor's petition on 5th January, 1929, and was directed to apply for the discharge within six months from that date. He applied on 4th July, 1929. Before his application the receiver had already applied under S. 53 questioning the validity of the deeds executed by the insolvent. During the pendency of the application the insolvent applied for his discharge and objections having been filed the following order was made. 'Let it be placed with the application for an order of discharge. Put up when any order is passed on the said application after the disposal of the receiver's application.' Meanwhile on an intermediate date the adjudication was annulled as the insolvent was absent. The creditors appealed questioning the correctness of the orders passed.

Held, that as the Court had not really fixed any date for the hearing of the insolvent's application for discharge and as that application was to be heard only after the disposal of the receiver's application under S. 53 the lower Court was wrong in annulling the order of adjudication. In execution of a money decree obtained by the appellant against his judgment-debtors he attached in December, 1926, in the Madras High Court, a preliminary decree for partition which had been passed by the High Court in favour of his judgment-debtors. In September, 1928, an order was made by the District Court at Secunderabad adjudicating as insolvents the said judgment debtors. The question having been raised as to what effect was to be given by the Madras Courts to the adjudication order of the Secunderabad Court in competition with the prior attachment of the decree in the Madras Court, Held, that the British Cantonment in Secunderabad being part of the Hyderabad State and the property of the Nizam, the District Court at Secunderabad was a 'foreign Court' in relation to the Courts of British India.

Held, further, that the appellant's prior attachment was not avoided by the subsequent adjudication of the foreign Court.

The money of the judgment debtor was deposited with the Court having been realized by attachment before judgment. The decree-holders immediately applied for payment. Instead of making an order straightaway, the court thought fit to issue a notice to the other side as to why the money should not be paid to the decree-holders. Soon after that order and before the hearing of the notice, an application was filed to have the judgment-debtors adjudged insolvents, and an interim receiver was appointed, who resisted the decree-holder's application.

——S. 51—Creditor's rights—Moneys realised between dates of presentation and admission of petition.

The date of admission of an insolvency petition does not relate back to the date of its presentation, in the absence of an express provision to that effect. Hence S. 51, Provincial Insolvency Act, does not deprive the creditors of the fruits of their decrees in respect of moneys which are brought into Court between the date of the presentation of petition for insolvency and the date of its admission. In execution of a decree, some of the debts due to the debtor were attached by the decree holder, but before the sale, a petition was filed in insolvency against the debtor and an interim receiver appointed. After the sale, the debtor was adjuged insolvent and the question arose whether the decree-holder was entitled against the Official Receiver to a first charge on the sale proceeds for the costs incurred by him in bringing the property to sale

Held, that S. 52 did not apply to the case, as it dealt with property which has not been brought to sale; that under S. 51, however, the words "benefit of the execution" referred to the net realisations after paying costs and charges and that the decree holder was entitled to the charge claimed by him (Pakenham Walsh, J.) SWAMINATHA AIYAR v. OFFICIAL RECEIVER OF SOUTH MALABAR. 57 Mad. 330 = 6 I R. The High Court in appeal ordered that the decree-holder should stay his execution proceedings against the prooperty of the judgment-debtor on condition that the judgment-debtor executed a registered mortgage deed of the land attached in favour of the decree-holder for his benefit The mortgage deed was accordingly executed. The decree-holder succeeded in the appellate proceedings. In the meantime the judgment debtor was adjudicated an insolvent on the application of the other creditors of the judgment-debtor.

Held, that the decree-holder was the person for whose benefit the mortgage security of the judgment-debtor's attached property had been created and hence he had become a secured creditor and was, therefore, entitled to a preferential right to the security over the other creditors as well as the Official Receiver who had subsequently come in. 56 I.C. 257, 41 Mad. 1053 and 92 I. ———S. 52—Powers of executing Court—Limits of—Jurisdiction of Insolvency Court.

Where an insolvency petition is admitted against a debtor, after attachment of his properties in execution of a decree against him, an application under S. 52 of the Provincial Insolvency Act has got to be made to the Court which is executing the decree and it is that Court alone which can direct the property to be delivered to the receiver in order that a sale may be held. ———S. 52—Principle underlying—Sale with notice of insolvency proceeding—Validity.

The underlying principle of the Provincial Insolvency Act as gathered from the provisions of S. 52 is that when the Court is apprised of the pendency of an application for insolvency in another Court and of the further fact that such application has been admitted it should stay its hands so far as the execution of the decree by the creditors of the insolvent are concerned. Where a sale is held notwithstanding the apprisement of insolvency proceedings the sale is void. (*Mitter and M. C. ———Ss. 53 and 54—Applicability—Relative scope of—Transfer to creditor—"Good faith"—Test.

If a transfer in favour of a creditor cannot be annulled under S. 54, the prescribed period of three months having elapsed, that provision cannot be circumvented by recourse being had to S. 53, which allows the longer period of two years. But it does not follow from this that the fact that the transfer is in favour of a creditor necessarily takes it out the reach of S. 53. S. 53, in addition to valuable consideration, insists upon good faith ; if the creditor-transferee is shown not to have acted bona fide, the transfer can be annulled. But in considering the question of good faith under S. 53, that element which relates to fraudulent preference, must be eliminated, that is to say, the knowledge for instance on the part of the transferee-creditor that the other creditors are being defrauded does not by itself constitute bad faith. But if, for instance, it is found that the property transferred is worth more than the debt and that the creditor intends to get a larger benefit than to what he is entitled, or where, though the sale is ostensibly in favour of a creditor there is some benefit reserved to the debtor, or again, where a third party, i.e., a person other than the transferee, is really intended to take the benefit, the sale will be annulled. Such cases of bad faith tainting the transfer, while being unconnected with the fraudulent preference which comes within the mischief of S. 54 are nevertheless within the ambit of S. 53. In the vicissitudes of business, firms do sometimes part with their property to get cash or satisfy old creditors and thus keep their credit in the market. proceed to demonstrate that it was quite consistent with good faith. 36 M.L.J. 483 (P.C.), Ref. One year before the insolvency, finding himself embarrassed, the insolvent transferred his entire immovable property in favour of the father of his son-in law. The property was at a conservative estimate worth about Rs. 18,000 but the sale price was Rs, 8,000 of which one half was adjusted towards a liability of the insolvent to the vendee. The other half, i.e., the amount of Rs. 4,000, was alleged to have been paid in the presence of the Sub-Registrar but no accounts were produced to show wherefrom it came or where it went. The property was not valued by lots; the title deeds were produced by the insolvent himself; the house was never in vendee's possession but was occupied by a relative of the vendor's wife.

The fact that that the creditor was not ignorant of the embarrassed circumstances of his debtor and that there may not be enough left after a transfer in his favour to meet the claims of the other creditors in the event of an adjudication is not sufficient to prove mala fides. No plausible method of carrying out the fraud, no plausible motive for such a fraud, was ever really put before the trial Judge at all, nor was it explained how it could be that these debtors if they were minded to enter into a transaction which was not a bona fide one should approach the manager of the branch business and induce him to enter into a series of forged entries in his book, because for every one of them he would eventually have to account to his principal.

Where a mortgage is executed by a father and his two minor sons who are represented by him as their guardian and the mortgage is effected to the extent of the major portion of the consideration for the purpose of discharging the antecedent debts of the father and the cash consideration received is stated to be for discharging some other debts by him, the purpose for which this mortgage is effected being, such as would justify the guardian of the minors to alienate their shares in the family property, the execution of the deed by the father as guardian of the minor sons would not be invalid. Therefore, in so far as it is an alienation by the two sons of the debtor (insolvent) it cannot be viewed as a transfer by the insolvent for the purposes of Ss. 53 and 54. But in proceedings properly framed under that section it may be convenient and sometimes necessary to have the parties before the Court whose interests will necessarily be affected by the decision It would indeed be extremely inconvenient and expensive if when transfers are sought to be avoided under Ss. 53 to 55, transferees from those transferees even though the sub-transfers were subsequent to the ——Ss. 54 and 56—Fraudulent preference—What constitutes.

To constitute preference within the Statute, it must be shown that the act of the debtor was a voluntary one, that is, without any pressure or compulsion exercised over him to do that which he had done. If the debtor was pressed by certain of his creditors and he in the course of business proceeded to borrow money under a mortgage for the payment of the debts due to those creditors, it cannot be said that that is an act of preferring one creditor or some of his creditors, but the whole body of his creditors. The question of preference is always a question of fact; and if there is anything to indicate that the money was borrowed under the mortgage for the purpose of paying off some of the creditors under pressure or there is any evidence to show that this was not a purely voluntary Act on the part of the debtor, then clearly there would be no case of preferential payment, which can be regarded as an act of insolvency on which a petition to adjudicate can be founded. ———S. 54—Fraudulent preference—What constitutes—Transfer on the eve of insolvency.

The use of the word "preference" implies an act of free will, and since an act done under pressure cannot be said to be an act of free-will, it is material in determining whether a transaction amounts to a fraudulent transfer or not to see what was the state of mind of the person making the transfer. Consequently to avoid a transaction as a fraudulent transfer, it is not sufficient that the creditor was preferred ; it must further be shown that the transfer was made with the view of giving him preference over the other creditors. It is not necessary that it should have been the sole view ; it is enough if it is the dominant, substantial, or "operative effectual view." If the view to prefer a particular creditor was only a secondary view, the transaction cannot be treated as a fraudulent preference. In each case what the Court has to find is whether the insolvent has preferred the creditor, with the dominant view of giving him preference over the other creditors. If the dominant view in making the transfer was to protect himself from legal proceedings, the transaction would not be a fraudulent preference. A transfer was made on the eve of insolvency, the creditor paying cash in addition to the prior debt which together formed the consideration of the transfer. The insolvent's position on the date of the transfer was far from desperate, although no doubt several suits were filed against him subsequently.

Held, that the transfer did not constitute a fraudulent preference under S. 54. (Venkatasubba Rao, J.) RAMASWAMI IYENGAR v CHINNATHAMBI KONE. 140 I. C. 463 = I.R. 1933 Mad. 15 = A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 459.

If a man is insolvent, and disposes of a portion of his property in favour of a bona fide creditor, although upon the eve of bankruptcy, and although this fact be known or believed by both parties it may be a perfectly valid and legal transaction. To render it invalid, there must be a disposition on the part of the insolvent to favour that particular creditor, and this is generally shown by the fact that the first step or proposal towards the disposal of the property in favour of that creditor proceeds from the insolvent-debtor But if the creditor, although he knows that the debtor is insolvent, presses and insists upon having a security for his debt, and the debtor yields to that pressure and gives the security, although it may be well known to both, at the same time, that the effect will be to give to that particular creditor an advantage over the other creditors of the insolvent, the transaction is perfectly good and valid. Johnson v. Fesenmeyer, 25 Beav. 88 ; Smith v. Pilgrim, (1876) 2 Ch D. 127, Foll. It is a well settled rule of interpretation of statutes that in the absence of a provision to the contrary, a new law ought not to be construed so as to interfere with vested rights. Where he comes to the executing Court for the purpose of saying that as the judgment-debtor's property now belonged to him the Court could not sell property vested in him for the judgment-debtor's debt, the receiver is not a representative of the judgment-debtor for purposes of the application under O. 21, R. 90, C. Held by the Full Bench—When the managing member of a joint Hindu family is adjudicated an insolvent on debts contracted as managing member, and other members of the joint Hindu family bring a suit for partition, subsequent to the application in insolvency, the decree for partition does not prevent the receiver from selling property allotted to members of the family other than the insolvent.

proceeding by a creditor. But there is no specific provision in the Act, under which a suit by an insolvent after his adjudication is, in express terms, prohibited. S. 59 (d) implies that the receiver is the proper person to institute, defend or continue suits and proceedings relating to the insolvent's property. Where the property in dispute in a suit is admitted to be or is of such a nature that it must vest in the receiver, a receiver alone is the proper person to institute suits and proceedings. The suit brought by an insolvent behind the back of the receiver would be defective. But where a loan is advanced by the insolvent after his adjudication to the defendant, it does not necessarily follow that the sum of money given by the insolvent was property which had vested in the receiver. The insolvent might be a mere benamidar on behalf of an undisclosed principal, in which case he would be entitled to sue even though an insolvent and the suit would, of course, be for the benefit of the real owner. Again under S. 28 (5) properties exempted by the Code of Civil Procedure or other enactments from liability to attachment and sale in execution of a decree do not vest in the receiver. Such moneys as are exempted, remain the property of the insolvent and if he has lent the money out of such accumulated savings, there would be no bar either to his lending the money to the defendant or to his bringing a suit to recover the amount. At the same time as a receiver, is an officer of the Court acting under the control and direction of the Court and in the interest of the insolvent's creditors, it is the duty of the Court to see that no fraud is perpetrated before its eyes, and that the insolvent does not walk away with moneys which ought to go to the officer of the Court. An appropriate course would seem to be, to implead the Official Receiver in the suit or at least give him notice of the action so that when a decree is passed in favour of the plaintiff, the receiver may be at liberty to take the benefit of the decree and recover the amount due under it, if it can be shown that the property was such as had vested in the receiver. Such inquiry can easily be made either in the execution department or by a separate suit between the receiver and the insolvent. (*Sulaiman, C. ——S. 68—Power of Court—Setting aside sale—Discretion of Court.

The Court would not readily set aside the sale held by the receiver of the property of the insolvent unless in the circumstances of the case the Court is satisfied that it would not be fair and just that the sale should stand. No doubt if the fraud or collusion is proved in connexion with the sale that would be a ground upon weich the Court would set aside the sale, or again possibly if there is material irregularity in the conduct of the sale. But the Court is not fettered in its discretion to set aside the sale in any case in which it thinks that the sale was neither a fair nor a just one. 5 Rang. 768, Overr.; 39 Mad. 479; 20 I. Where the two creditors of the insolvent are the only two prospective bidders, it is neither fair nor reasonable that the receiver should hold the sale in the absence of the other creditor at an earlier hour than that at which sales normally are held and long before the other creditor could reasonably be expected to be present and without making enquiries to ascertain whether the other creditor was at that place or giving him any opportunity to be present when the sale took place. Where the receiver seizes the property, not without power, alleging it to be the property of the insolvent and if the authority of the Insolvency Court is to be invoked to revise that act of the receiver, this can only be done under S. 68. The remedy under S. 68 is not the only remedy open to a person aggrieved by an act of the receiver A stranger to insolvency proceedings may at his option seek his redress in the ordinary civil Court or he may apply under S. 68 Provincial Insolvency Act but if he takes the latter course he must comply with the terms of the section. He cannot be heard to say, in order to avoid the effect of the plain terms of the proviso to S 68, that he makes his application under S. 4 and not under that section. Though the powers of the Court in deciding such an application are defined in S. 4, it does not mean that the application itself is made under S. 4 and clearly at cannot; for S. 4 contains no provision as to how the Court is to be moved to exercise its powers. PROV. INSOLV. ACT (1920), S. 69.

The gist of the offence under S. 69 is that a man whose property is required by law to be distributed among his creditors in the statutory manner is doing something to get his property distributed in another manner. All that is meaningless in the absence of an order of adjudication. Consequently proceedings under S. 69 cannot be taken after a petition for adjudication has been dismissed and it is known that the alleged debtor is not going to be made insolvent at all. ——S. 75 (1)—"Person aggrieved"—Creditor not a party to the proceedings applying under S. 68.

Where a creditor of an insolvent filed a petition to set aside the sale of some of the insolvent's properties by the Official Receiver of the insolvent's estate and subsequently, it was found, that he had collusively withdrawn his petition and allowed it to be dismissed by the Court, and another creditor of the same insolvent who applied to have the order of dismissal reviewed and to have himself added as a party in that petition but was not made a party to the proceedings under S. 68 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, appealed bona fide against the order of dismissal.

Held, that though the creditor appealing was not a party to the proceedings, still having regard to the fact that he was aggrieved by the orders appealed against, he would come within the terms of S. 75 and would be entitled to prefer the appeal. 56 Cal. 667 (F.B.); 49 Mad. 794; 50 M.L.J. 602, Ref. to. The expression "aggrieved person" means a person who has got a legal grievance, that is, a person who is wrongfully deprived of anything to which he is legally entitled and not merely a person who has suffered some sort of disappointment. Where the Judge of the Insolvency Court granted a lease of a hotel to the highest bidder at an auction and the prior lessee of a hotel appealed against the order granting the lease.

The expression "aggrieved person' means a person, who has got a legal grievance, i e, a person who is wrongfully deprived of anything to which he is legally entitled and not merely a person who has suffered some sort of disappointment. Where the properties of the deceased insolvent are ordered to vest in a receiver who is appointed for purposes of realization and distribution, the sons or legal representatives of the insolvent cannot be regarded as "persons aggrieved" so far as that order is concerned, and as such no appeal lies under S. 75 (3) without the leave of District Court or of the High Court. The only injury suffered by the sons by the order of the Disdrict Judge is that stigma would attach to them by the property of their father being handed over to a receiver.

Revision.

——Ss. 75 and 4—Revision—Competency—Remedy by way of appeal open—Order for sale of insolvent's interest—Application by purchaser to consider question of title—Issues framed.

During the course of insolvency proceedings the receiver reported that certain properties had been fictitiously alienated by the insolvent and requested the Court to go into the question under S. 4 and restore possession of the properties to him. The Court did not go into the question, but purporting to act under sub S. (3), S. 4, ordered that the saleable interests of the insolvent in the properties be sold. The properties were accordingly auctioned. Subsequently the auction purchasers applied to the Court for the question of title being inquired into and possession restored to them. A preliminary objection that the Court had already decided and that it would not inquire into the matter under S. 4 was overruled and issues on merits were framed.

Held, that no petition for revision was competent as an appeal by leave of the Court was competent under S. 75. (Bhide, J.) MILAWA RAM v. KESAR DAS. 6 I.R. (Lah.) 247 (1) = 146 I.C. 545 (1) = A.I.R 1933 Lah. 611 (2).

Against the appellate order both the creditor and Insolvent preferred appeals.

Held, that the order under appeal was not covered by S. 4 and that no second appeal lay.

Where a suit filed in the Small Causes Court at Gorakhpur was transferred by the District Judge to the Court of the Subordinate Judge under S. 24, C. P. Held, that though it was a fact that Gorakhpur was one of the places where a Small Cause Court Judge was usually posted, it did not follow that there was an officer with these powers posted on the date of transfer and it was necessary for the applicant to show this from a reference to not only civil lists but also Gazettes. Where, therefore, an application is made to set aside an exparte decree passed by the Union Court, and that application is transferred by the District Judge to a Munsif with Small Cause powers for disposal it is not necessary for the applicant to deposit the decree amount or to furnish security therefor as contemplated by the proviso to S. 17.
